PIETRO BALBO'S SUSPENSE.

HIS COUNSEL STILL ACTIVELY WORKING TO SAVE HIS LIFE.

To Die in Six Days Unless Spared by the Governor's Interference—How he Interprets the Burning Sensation in his Left Ear.

Usually, while one set of courts contribute prisoners to the Tombs, other courts dispose of them, and a steady current of men and women pours through the prison. It is not so now. The higher courts are idle, and the great prison is filling up. Twice a day the 350 prisoners are given the liberty of the corridors for exercise. On these occasions Pietro Balbo holds a reception. The other prisoners walk close to the railings, looking down to where he sits or stands on the floor of the central court. He is distinguished by his shirt sleeves and uncovered head. The prison officials, and the deputies who constitute the "death watch," wear their hats and coats. Balbo spends but little time in his cell. He is usually in his bed or on his knees before his altar when he is in there. The remainder of the time he spends in the court chatting with the deputy sheriffs and the keepers.

Deputies A. Aarons and Thomas F. Daly were with Balbo yesterday. He considers these officers "lucky." These were with him when Justice Pratt granted the first stay of proceedings in January, and again when Gov. Cornell postponed the execution last May. In his own mind Balbo associates these officials with his left ear in a curious bit of superstitious reasoning.

"My ear burned very much all day that time Judge Pratt signed the paper in January," said Balbo, "and to-day it burned again. But not so much to-day. Only a little. It was while I was praying that it burned. Then I thought of these gentlemen, and I hoped there would be some good news. My lawyer, Mr. Kintzing, came in this afternoon and told me that Gov. Cornell would be in town to-night. Maybe that is why my ear burned. Maybe Alonzo B. Cornell will give my case consideration."

Balbo has learned the Governor's full name, and calls him by it almost exclusively. He was asked what he believed the Governor would do.

"I tell you," said he, "I believe Alonzo B. Cornell has got a good heart. I believe he will give me consideration. Every man has a wife, and many men have bad wives; but I had a very bad wife. He will feel sorry for me that my wife was so bad, and fought me and tried to kill me and scratched me and bit me. Oh, Gov. Cornell has a good heart—he has a very good heart for me. But," and the man dropped his eyes and bit his lip, "nobody can see inside Alonzo B. Cornell's skin . . . Nobody can tell. My life is in his hands. Well—I must pray to the Lord and prepare for the worst."

It is difficult to obtain the views of the prison officials on this unpleasant subject. They say that they get well acquainted with their prisoners, and then their sympathy is pretty sure to be gained by a man under sentence of death, especially if he behaves as well as Balbo does. Cox awakened this sympathy in its strongest degree, and Balbo is now the object of double commiseration. Therefore the officials say but little. It is evident that they regard Balbo as a more emotional and nervous man than Cox was, and they dread the effect of adverse action by the Governor. They say that Balbo is sustained by hope.

The condemned man had two lady visitors yesterday, and Father Reardon spent an hour or more with him, mainly in prayer. Balbo was greatly pleased with a letter that he received yesterday. It was first opened by the deputies, the envelope and paper being examined for poison, or whatever else might be concealed in it, and the letter itself being read, because it is the duty of the watchers to read all letters that are sent to a condemned man. John A. Evens of 5 Beekman street was the writer.

"I consider it a great piece of injustice to compare your case with that of Caroline Cox," he wrote, "for it was a low greed for money that incited him to crime, while your misfortune arose from a passion that all the grandeur of Othello's intellect could not deter or subdue. Human justice cannot go so far, but mercy should have been tried, in order to make all things even, by a jury of men smarting under the sting of a wife's dishonor. But there is one thing you have that no power can deprive you of, and that is the fact that you belong to our grand old Church, and that no doubt she has ere this moulded your heart to repentance. She teaches us that the prayers of the living avail us after death, and should it be your lot to anticipate the time at which you, in common with us all, must 'wrap the drapery of your couch about you, and lie down to pleasant dreams,' do not fear that you will be forgotten in the prayers of many. I will myself see that each year I live (poor, erring fellow) at least one mass shall be said for the repose of your soul, and doubtless many others will do likewise. Be, therefore, prepared for eternal rest. In all earthly things the element of doubt enters so be apprehensive, but be hopeful to the end."

Balbo spends more and more time at his devotions, and no longer prays aloud, as he used to. He arises from his devotions with red eyes and a sober face; but he is not melancholy. He talks cheerfully, and with all who come to see him. He is given whatever he asks for at meals, and ever since his sentence has dined from Matron Foster's table, by the Sheriff's order. He is not given to the kind of industry that prisoners who are confined to their cells usually adopt in order to kill time, yet he has learned to print English letters, and he has cut out a paper transparency showing the head of the Saviour, a cross, and the letters "I. H. S.," which he exhibits with great pride. He continues to rearrange the parts of his altar, and he adds to it from bit of printing he finds, whether the subject is entirely appropriate or not.

Lawyer Kintzing intended to see Gov. Cornell at Long Branch yesterday, but he received word that the Governor started for this city early in the day. Mr. Kintzing expects to have an interview to-day.

A PIOUS SON-IN-LAW.

The Means he Adopted to Cure his Wife's Father of Smoking.

BINGHAMTON, July 30.—Edgar Babcock is a leading church member and Superintendent of a Sabbath school in New Berlin. Jeremiah Goodrich is Babcock's father-in-law. He is 80 years old, a great smoker, and childish. His son-in-law is opposed to the old gentleman's use of the weed and has often requested him to quit smoking. On Monday, according to a neighbor of Babcock's, old Mr. Goodrich went into his son-in-law's barn to see him milk the cows. While looking on he took out his pipe, filled and lit it, and began puffing away at Babcock's side. Babcock was disgusted. He told the old gentleman to stop smoking. The octogenarian kept on extracting pleasure from the clay pipe that he had colored by long use, and of which he was especially fond and proud. The son-in-law picked up a pitchfork and with a savage blow of the handle knocked the pipe out of the old gentleman's mouth and scattered it about the fourth floor in a dozen pieces. The father-in-law gave his daughter's husband his opinion of him in very emphatic language. The latter knocked the old man down and gave him so severe a pummeling that he with difficulty reached the residence of a son near by. Old Mr. Goodrich's head and face were shockingly cut and bruised. It was necessary to call a physician to attend to his injuries. The octogenarian says his injuries do not distress him so much as the loss of his pipe.

Where He Will Not Throw Vitriol.

Mrs. Belle Cowan of 359 West Twenty-seventh street complained in the Jefferson Market Police Court that her husband, Frank Cowan of 205 East Twenty-fourth street, had threatened to throw vitriol on her.

Justice Kilbreth issued a warrant, and Cowan was brought before him yesterday. Mrs. Cowan said she was forewoman in a paper box factory, and did not live with her husband. He has treated her so badly that she left him four years ago. He had attempted suicide by cutting his throat, but recovered in Bellevue Hospital. She believed that jealousy and whiskey had made him crazy. For months past he abused her continually. He had stopped her in the street to slander her. On Monday he addressed her with vile names, and said the next time he met her he would throw vitriol on her.

Justice Kilbreth asked Cowan what he had to say. He scowled at his wife, and said that he had a quiet talk with him he would rail over. The Justice committed him to Blackwell's Island for one year.

William Ogle at Liberty.

William Ogle was indicted with Charles Brookway, alias "Biz Kentucky," and Andrew Gilligan, alias "Swim," for forgery in the third degree. The principal charge was the forgery of checks on the Phœnix National Bank of this city. Ogle was convicted on the 19th of June last and sentenced to the State prison for five years. Peter Mitchell, his counsel, sued out a writ of error, and asked Justice Donohoe to discharge Ogle on bail pending the appeal to the General Term of the Supreme Court. Justice Donohoe yesterday admitted Ogle to bail in the sum of $5,000, and he was thereupon discharged from custody. Brockway and Gilligan are in the House of Detention.

Gone Back to Drink.

Margaret Gordon of 317 East Thirty-ninth street was committed to the penitentiary three months ago for burning her baby on a stove. A week ago her husband secured her release, and she promised to do better. Her three little children were returned to her from the House of the Friendless. She began to drink again, and Mr. Lunberg of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children visited her yesterday and found her drunk. She was arrested, and when examined in the Yorkville Police Court she was too drunk to be examined.

Body Found in the Hudson.

NEWBURGH, July 30.—The body of an unknown man was found in the Hudson, near Cornwall, this morning. He had been in the water but a little while, and he is supposed to have been lost last night off the night steamer St. John. He had in his pocket a passage ticket of that boat, $1 in money, and a ticket to a play at "Widow Owens's, 5 Prospect place."

A YACHT THAT STEERS ITSELF.

Mr. Frank B. Lawrence's Invention that Astonished the Battery Boatmen.

The Battery boatmen looked on with much interest on Wednesday afternoon as Mr. Frank B. Lawrence of 46 Cliff street was rigging his new boat in the blight of the stone pier. This boat, which has been constructed upon an entirely new model, is called the Hancock, after the Democratic nominee for President. With a sister yacht, the Perriwinkle, Mr. Lawrence last year vanquished the best of the Battery 19-foot boats both on and by the wind. It was for this reason that the Battery watermen, most of whom are adroit with the tiller and the sheet, displayed so much anxiety yesterday when one of their number, Frank Kane, hailed a reporter for THE SUN started down the bay with the owner to test the new boat. Mr. Lawrence believes that the canvas should be distributed about a boat according to the displacement. Again, he believes that the position in which it is necessary to keep the rudders of yachts, as ordinarily rigged when close hauled, serves to retard their progress through the water. As is well known, when the sails of a small yacht are trimmed by the wind, the helmsman sits upon the windward rail and presses the helm toward him. Thus, in order to counteract the force exerted upon the head sails, it is necessary to keep the rudder at an obtuse angle with the sternpost. The rudder in this position scoops up the water as the yacht advances, and it has been calculated that this retardation is equal to double the force necessary to keep the helm hard up. To obviate this, Mr. Lawrence has rigged a steering sail over the stern of the Hancock, and yesterday afternoon, while running down the bay with port tacks aboard, the yacht steered itself, and Frank Kane, who had been holding the yoke ropes, dropped them upon the thwarts and stared at the rudder in amazement. So did the crews of the many vessels passed on the way down.

Many yachtsmen when about to come in stays keep their craft away at first. This generally brings a boat around in a great circle. Often, too, it results in missstaying, and then much time is lost in hauling the head sails to windward so as to box her off on the other tack. When Lawrence tacked his boat yesterday, instead of putting the helm hard down with a jerk, as many yachtsmen do, which is sure to retard a boat's headway, he moved the helm gently. Then the Hancock turned nimbly on her heel and forged ahead as she came in stays on the opposite tack. She was dextrously assisted in this by the helmsman, who hauled in the slack of the main sheet, thus keeping the mainsail full and telling to the last moment. The jib, too, instead of being let go by the run, was carefully eased up by its sheet until the craft was fairly head to wind. As soon as the jib fluttered to leeward of the stay, the sheet was hauled home quickly and securely belayed.

The Hancock is twenty feet over all, is five feet four inches in the beam, and two feet deep. Her streaks lap each other, and are of white cedar. It would be impossible to sink her or to keep her keel up, as she has two transoms filled with cork running her entire length.

The Prize Flight of Doves.

William Verrinder's carrier doves, Firt Mate and Hamburg, which were liberated in the flock of nine at Columbus, Ohio, on Saturday last, at 5¼ A. M., were found in the trap of his aviary on Jersey City Heights at 10 o'clock yesterday morning. Hamburg is named after the town in Pennsylvania where he won first prize. First Mate was his mate. They were marked "Columbus Race" by the Hudson County Antelopes, and counter marked "D. S." by the liberator, D. D. Stansil, United States Signal Agent at Columbus. Mr. Verrinder's bird Columbia, the champion, winged his way to his coop at 8:25 o'clock on Sunday morning, and Henry Never's bird Nichol reached Williamsburgh on Monday at 10:05 P. M., second in the race. Five pigeons are yet to be heard from.

Henry Never's bird Rowell arrived at its cote in Williamsburgh at about 11 o'clock yesterday morning.

Comptroller Steinmetz's Dilemma.

The Mayor, Auditor, and Comptroller of Brooklyn met yesterday to appoint a fourth Justice, but they were unable to agree. The Auditor named Justice Fisher, and the Mayor named Justice Semler, but Comptroller Steinmetz said that he was not ready to vote for either nominee at present, and the meeting was adjourned until Aug. 27. Comptroller Steinmetz is in a dilemma, which is attracting much attention. The Justices' bill was passed mainly by the efforts of Mr. F. S. Fisher, who expected an appointment under it, and the Comptroller, who is a Republican, is being urged by many Republicans to appoint him. By refusing to vote for Justice Semler, he will offend many Germans, whose votes he wants next fall, when he expects to be a candidate for reelection. The Comptroller said yesterday that the result of the situation would be a compromise candidate.

In Sight of the Arctic Whaling Fleet.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 30.—The Alaska Commercial Company's steamer Dora arrived here last evening in twelve days from Gunalaska. Her commander reports that the United States revenue cutter Thomas Corwin returned to Gunalaska from the Arctic region on July 8. She had been within 140 miles of Wrangel Land, and the schooner Alaska and several other vessels of the whaling fleet were seen, but Capt. Hooper was unable to communicate with any of them, owing to the large quantities of ice. The Corwin coaled and sailed again for the Arctic circle on July 11.

A Post Office Robbed.

BRADFORD, Pa., July 30.—The Post Office at Eldred, McKean County, was broken into last night. The safe was blown open, and $100 in cash, $30 in stamps, and several registered letters from the East stolen. No clue has been discovered. The explosion of the safe was heard all over the village, but the citizens thought it a Greek fire explosion and paid no heed. The robbers drove off in a buggy.

Yachting Notes.

There will be a race between steam yachts at Newport during the New York Yacht Club cruise for a valuable cup, given on condition that a uniform steam pressure is agreed upon.

Commodore J. G. Bennett yesterday offered handsome silver cups to the New York Yacht Club, to be sailed for by sloops and schooners at Newport during the New York Yacht Club cruise.
