LADY BURDETT-COUTTS'S MARRIAGE.

Some Mistakes Corrected—False Rumors that Packed the Savoy and St. George's.

So many incorrect and unfounded accounts of Mr. W. L. Ashmead Bartlett and of the circumstances of his proposed marriage to Lady Burdett-Coutts have been circulated by the so-called "society journals" that Lady Coutts, through her friend Sir Edmund Antrobus, has given them an authoritative denial. Mr. Bartlett has never been "secretary" or "cashier" to the Baroness, nor has he ever been a clerk in Coutts's bank, or held any position whatever in connection with that house or the philanthropic lady who is its principal, except the purely honorary one which sprang from their mutual esteem, and which sent him to Turkey as special commissioner of the Turkish compassionate fund and to Ireland to report upon and endeavor to relieve in some degree the late distress. In these two public services Mr. Bartlett's only relation to her ladyship was that of a trusted friend, and this only reward the letter of thanks and Second-class and Collar of the Medjidié given to him by the Sultan for his efforts during the war in Turkey, where he contracted a fever which nearly deprived society of its present opportunity for gossip.

Again, regarding the statement of his nationality and the reflection thereon, it is true he was born in America; but all his friends know that he has lived nearly all his life in England, has been at school and passed through college there, has his property in that country, as well as his past and present associations, both personal and political. The highest personage in England has been represented as interfering to prevent the proposed marriage. Lady Burdett-Coutts says that this is wholly unfounded. The Queen has not herself, or by any intimation through any other, conveyed any opinion on her intended alliance.

The assertions made with regard to the matter of the interests of the Baroness must, Sir Edmund Antrobus, himself a partner, says, be received with the greatest reserve, as all that has been said on the subject has been seriously inaccurate. Lady Coutts's friends very fairly question the right of the public to interfere or express an opinion on the propriety of the private acts of this most charitable lady, who has for over forty years devoted herself and her fortune to the relief of distress and the amelioration of the condition of her fellow creatures. Her grandfather, the constructor of her fortune, when over 86 years of age, married Miss Mellon, the actress, then 38. She subsequently (1826), when 49 years old, married the Duke of St. Albans, then in his 25th year.

It has been also incorrectly stated that the estates and property of the Duchess of St. Albans in Coutts's bank were devised, in case of the decease of Angela (Lady Burdett-Coutts), to her sister Clara (Mrs. Money). This is not so. "In case," the will runs, "of the decease of the said Angela Georgina Burdett, in trust for such son of the said Angela Georgina Burdett as shall first attain the age of 21 years, his heirs, &c.; and in case of her decease and that there shall not be any such son, in trust for Johanna Frances Burdett, third daughter of Sir Francis Burdett (who died unmarried, 1862); * * * and in case of her decease, for such son of said Johanna Frances Burdett as shall first attain the age of 21, his heirs, &c.; and in case of her decease and that there shall not be any such son, then in similar manner to Clara Maria Burdett, fourth daughter of Sir Francis Burdett (married, 1856, to the Rev. J. Drummond Murray, who died 1875), and her son, and so again in a similar entail to Dudley Coutts Marjoribanks (a godson of Thomas Coutts and son of one of the partners in the banking house), and again to Coutts Lindsay (her own godson, a grandson of Sir Coutts Trotter, another partner in Coutts's)."

In connection with the romance of the Baroness and Mr. Bartlett, the society of London has had two deplorable disappointments. The first was on Tuesday, Aug. 17. It was whispered that the marriage would take place at the Savoy on that day. At the hour said to have been fixed there were fully four thousand people massed as thick as a crowd at a Home Rule demonstration in the narrow space between the Embankment and Fleet street, where stands the historic little church. Quite a large fraction of the throng were society people, who came in their carriages, thus helping to complete one of the most singular blocks that ever choked the London thoroughfare. The sacred edifice was swamped in five minutes after the doors were opened, and it was edifying to see Lord Tom Noddy and the Hon. Mr. Fitz-hee-haw and Lady Clara Vere de Vere, all in the thick of the rush, fighting for the entrance with roughs from Wild street and fruit women from Drury lane. Among the few hundred who filled the church were at least two Peers and half a dozen members of Parliament, and the general concourse had its full proportion of these exalted elements. After half an hour the clergyman, the Rev. Henry White, who was to have performed the ceremony, came out of the vestry room in his surplice and informed the gathering that they must leave. A popular comedian, Mr. J. Clark, challenged the order at once. Being told, however, that it was a private, not a public chapel, the congregation reluctantly left, the clergyman locking the doors as the last intruder crossed the threshold. But they remained in the little churchyard and the very dingy lanes and blind alleys of the Savoy fully three hours afterward, a rumor having circulated that the bride and bridegroom were at hand and only waiting the retreat of the crowd to make their appearance. At 3 o'clock, the Rev. Mr. White came out of the church, and, entering a cab, drove away. But not a soul budged, this proceeding being considered part of the attempted evasion. At 4 he returned, and was received with cheers. A bold reporter went up to the cab with a pointblank question as to when the performance was going to commence, but Mr. White, putting the key of the church to his lips smiled significantly, and said that for urgent and specific reasons he could give no information. The block in the precinct continued up to 5 o'clock.

Another demonstration took place on the 23d at that famous temple of hymen, St. George's, Hanover square. This being in the region of the high world, the curious throng was less motley, but no less unfortunate, than the mixed crowd at the Savoy. At 2 o'clock fully a hundred vehicles of all sorts were drawn up in a complete circuit of the square, while their owners girt themselves with patience as well as they could in the church just round the corner. The old pew opener was the only soul in possession, and she seems to have made a good thing of it. Her palm having been crossed with many pieces of gold and silver in the hope of charming the secret out of her. But the ancient dame was in the state of the needy knife grinder. After a while she marched off to the residence of one of the clergy of the parish, who soon appeared and assured his genteel audience that they were on the wrong scent. His statement was received with visible incredulity, as was evidenced by the fact that the audience stuck to their seats for a couple of hours after. It is now announced that the marriage, if it takes place at all, will not be solemnized for eight or nine weeks.

Geo. Fincke of 162 Orchard street was discharged.

The Stone from Egypt.

The obelisk, at Staten Island, now rests lengthwise upon two pontoons, each 95 feet long, 15 feet wide, and 8 feet deep. A trial at floating was made on Monday, and the engineer thinks there will be no difficulty in restipping it to the city. When the work of making the centre of gravity of the obelisk correspond with that of the pontoons is completed, the water will be pumped out so that the pontoons will float, and they will be towed to the foot of West Ninety-sixth street. It is not expected that the monolith will be towed up the bay before the close of the week.

Joe Goss Under Arrest.

Joe Goss, the pugilist, was arrested yesterday by Chief of Police Rogers of Detroit, Mich., who telegraphed an inquiry to Superintendent Walling whether the prisoner should be sent to New York. Superintendent Walling replied that Goss was not wanted here, but that the authorities of West Virginia might want him for his late prize fight with Paddy Ryan in that State. Information of the arrest was sent to Wheeling.
