SUNBEAMS.

—A girl employed in a Fall River mill at $3 a week finds herself heiress to $150,000.

—Among the reprints which Mr. Elliot Stock of London will issue shortly will be a fac-simile of the first edition of "Robinson Crusoe," reproduced from the very fine copy in Mr. Huth's library.

—The names of many strangers who migrated to Russia have become so altered that scholars are unable to trace their original form. They have, however, discovered that the Russian Khomutof was once the English Hamilton.

—Frank Wise fled in safety from Wichita, Kansas, with the $40,000 which he had obtained by swindling; but his brother, whom he left behind to effect a compromise with the losers, only escaped from perplexity and disgrace by suicide.

—A correspondent of the London Daily News, who has lately visited Gen. Garibaldi, reports that he suffers terribly, and is a mere wreck, dependent on the loving hands that wait upon him; but he is cheerful in mind, and does not aggravate his affliction by idle complaints.

—It is an old Belgian custom that the King stands godfather when a seventh son is born in a family. On these occasions the King is represented by the burgomaster of the locality. The Roman Catholic clergy in several instances recently have refused to admit the King as godfather.

—There is to be a baby show in Horticultural Hall, Boston, with a prize each for the baby under a year old with the handsomest eyes, the blackest eyes, the bluest eyes, the most hair, the least hair, the most weight, the least weight, the smallest hands, and the smallest feet. The finest baby will receive a grand prize.

—A boy was handed a glass containing fluid in a wine bottling establishment at Albany. Supposing that all liquid in such a place was intended to drink, he swallowed what really was diluted oil of vitriol. This was used to remove stains from the hands of the employees, and the lad was simply expected to hold it for a moment.

—Farmer Dorsey undertook to replace the tire on a wagon wheel at Mercer, Va. The ordinary process is to expand the tire by heating it, and slip it into place, where it tightens by contraction as it cools. But in this instance there was trouble at every stage of the work. The tire was not hot enough, the tire was not a true circle, and after spending half a day fruitlessly at the job, the exasperated man committed suicide.

—The colored Sons and Daughters of Rebecca were dancing merrily in a St. Louis hall, and the members of the German Baptist Conference were eating supper in a room underneath. A janitor entered an apartment adjoining the hall where the gas had been turned on unlighted, and struck a match. A tremendous explosion was the result, and an entire set of dancers dropped through the shattered floor right on the clergymen's table. Ball and supper were both ruined.

—The "Père Prodigue," by Alexandre Dumas, been revived at the Vaudeville, Paris, with success. An agreeable anecdote is told of the "Pere Prodigue" on its first appearance. Some quinzaine met young Dumas behind the scenes just after the success of his play was assured, and with the latent sneer peculiar to his class observed: "Of course you mean your own father." "Oh dear, no," replied the younger Dumas. "If I had meant him, I should have called my piece 'Le Pere Prodigue.'"

—The Salford, England, borough analyst reported to the Town Council lately the results of his examination of some samples of "unfermented wine." One sample consisted of sugar, tartaric acid, some salicylic acid, some coloring matter, and a quantity of copper. Another was an artificially-made article, and contained alcohol. One, labelled "Selected Wine of the Temperance Fraternity," contained a large amount of alcohol. Only one sample was pure, and was what it was represented to be.

—Mrs. Anna Stiles had two neighbors, at South Windsor, Conn., whom she hated, and sent them two packages of poisoned candy by mail. Two families were made dangerously ill, but only one life was lost. Mrs. Stiles was arrested, but before the time for her trial she became insane. That was nine years ago. Now the physicians of the asylum in which she has spent the interval pronounce her fully recovered, and she is to be tried for the crime which, she says, seems to her to have been committed only yesterday.

—Ex-Queen Isabella has profited by the cordial reception she met with from her former subjects to press a claim for a sum of money due her by the State as heiress of the late King Ferdinand. It is larger than Spain's weak treasury could afford. But the Queen mother being satisfied with the interest in her lifetime and the reversion of the capital to her, it has been allowed. Part of the money is due for the gallery of Ferdinand, which his heiress is supposed to have given, when she came of age, to the nation.

—There is much social commotion at Cleveland, Ohio. John L'Hommedieu is one of the wealthiest men in the city. His son married Miss Fargo, against her parents' wish. For several weeks the two families quarrelled over the young wife. The Fargos would take her home, and then the L'Hommedieus would take her away. She submitted passively to the frequent transfers. Public opinion seems to have favored the Fargos, who stand high in the community, and one night bills were posted about town censuring the senior L'Hommedieu. He retaliated by stabbing Fargo père.

—Sir G. W. Des Voux, Governor of the Fiji Islands, talked with a Chicago Times reporter while on his way across our continent. Des Voux is an Englishman, but for years has been one of the 2,000 whites who live among the 150,000 natives on the eighty islands forming the Fiji group. He said that until three years ago the mountain region of Ovalau was occupied by ferocious cannibals numbering about 10,000, and given beyond question to man eating in their festival ceremonies. These savages are now under effectual subjugation. The Governor predicts prosperity for enlightened Fijians.

—Belknap and Mrs. Greene eloped together, at Melrose, Wis. They drove a good horse rapidly, but had not gone more than ten miles before they heard a clatter of hoofs behind. Greene had hastily mounted and started in pursuit. The race was long and exciting; but the husband at length rode alongside the pair, cocked a pistol, and commanded a halt. Belknap was abject with terror. "You may have your wife, Mr. Greene," he said. "I don't want her." Greene replied, "you don't think I've chased you like mad to get her back! Oh, no. But I'll take my dollar and a half that she's got in her pocket." The money was given up, and the elopement proceeded quietly.

—Marshal Bazaine, who has just written to inform his friends—"if he has any"—that he is alive, had many in the English army in the Crimea, where, though he had no independent command in the course of the war, he commanded the French portion of the expedition which reduced Kinburn. His table was about the best outside Sebastopol. Bread might occasionally have been wanting, but you had a better chance of finding a Yorkshire ham and a pot of marmalade there than in the tents of guardsmen and highlanders. Mme. Bazaine accompanied her husband, and was admired and respected by all, even English officers losing their reserve in endeavors to render her sojourn in camp agreeable.

—In San Francisco the leaders of society have been giving a series of tableaux from the works of popular authors in aid of the poor. Each performance was opened by a procession, in which characters from many celebrated works figured. The female wealth and beauty of the city were represented in these spectacles. At the head was a guard of girls in military uniforms of scarlet and gold, and after them came personages from the "Iliad," Bret Harte, Bulwer, Dickens, Beade, Shakespeare, and the Bible. All the costumes were appropriate, and in most instances the parts were taken by persons whose appearance was suitable. After the parade, they took their places in separate booths for tableaux, and finally to sell refreshments and other things. The affair was a great social and financial success. Some of the ladies, however, are said to have made sacrifices of propriety in costuming themselves for mythological characters.

—M. Tissot is engaged on a series of pictures illustrating the story of the Prodigal Son. M. Tissot's Prodigal is not at all heroic. In the first picture the scene is an old-fashioned room, with charts and maps upon the walls and a great bow window looking out upon the Thames. To the right are the Prodigal and his father; they are speaking, and the elder man is handing to the younger a check. To the left, displeased and sulky, are the Prodigal's brother and a young lady seated at a table. In the second of the series, which will probably prove the most popular of the four, the scene has shifted to Japan, where, in a tea house on the water, lighted with crimson lanterns, the Prodigal is watching a bevy of Japanese dancers. In the third, on a London wharf, the Prodigal, in rags, is kneeling before his father. Behind them are the discontented brother and the young lady of the first picture. In the fourth the fatted calf has been killed and is being eaten. The background is a June landscape. To the left, in an arbor commanding the river, the Prodigal and his family are at table.

—From the mangy, half-starved, snapping cure which form such a universal feature of the cities and villages of China, the dog-loving foreigner, says the Celestial Empire, has some difficulty in abstracting the ideal animal of Western poets and essayists. Among the Chinese the dog is variously viewed through media of varying density. He is despised in common with the whole of the brute creation, but the value of his services as guardian of the house and an incorruptible night watchman is fully recognized. A black dog with white ears is said to be the king of his race; a black dog with yellow eyebrows is highly esteemed as a good house dog, while a white one with black eyebrows is correspondingly at a discount as likely to destroy the prosperity of its owner. A "lion dog," i. e., one of the small shaggy breed of the north is, on the contrary, regarded as a possession likely to improve the fortunes of the family in which it may be domesticated. The "sleeve dog," so called from being of a size sufficiently diminutive to admit of its being carried in the wide Chinese sleeve, is the lap dog of China, and, like the above-mentioned "lion dog," is only to be seen in wealthy establishments or for sale among the native dog fancier's collection. "Black dragon," "Blackie," "Yellow Ear," "Jewel," "Pearl," &c., are specimens of the names most in vogue.

MR. LOWBER'S GOLD BADGE.

Why Brooklyn Police Officials are Curious to Know Where he Got it.

There is much curiosity among Brooklyn police officials as to where ex-City Works Commissioner E. J. Lowber procured the police captain's gold shield which was taken from him on Friday night last when he was arrested, as related in THE SUN of Sunday, for having fired two shots at Mr. W. H. Nolan from the stoop of Nellie Stoothoff's house, in Hoyt street, Brooklyn. The shield is the duplicate of those worn by the police captains in Brooklyn, and no one besides a police captain is supposed to have one. Mr. Lowber, it is said, obtained the shield from the late Police Commissioner D. D. Briggs when he (Mr. Lowber) was in office. Although a number of members of the Police Department knew that Mr. Lowber wore the shield, it was never called in. Some time ago Mr. Lowber had a complaint to make to the Bergen street police against some persons who were troubling Nellie Stoothoff. The Sergeant at the desk, who was subsequently transferred, told him that if he was a police captain at large, as his wearing of the gold badge seemed to indicate, he had as much right to make arrests as any other policeman, and that so long as he wore the badge he could not, with grace, ask any other policeman to protect him or his friends.

In July last Mr. Lowber entered the Police Headquarters in Brooklyn in the custody of a detective. He was much excited, and it seemed that he was under arrest; but strict secrecy was observed, and it was represented that he had called to see Superintendent Campbell, with whom he was on friendly terms. Since his arrest for felonious assault on Friday it has been developed that a German barber, who lived in apartments in Fulton street, opposite St. Felix street, reported to the Superintendent of Police one day that at about 2 o'clock that morning he was awakened by his wife, who told him that there was a burglar in their bedroom. The barber saw an aged man, of medium size, with gray hair and whiskers, in the room, and at once began to look for his pistol. The intruder ran out, saying as he went: "I thought I was in Miss Stoothoff's house." Before the barber could use the pistol the man had reached the street. The barber's description pointed to Mr. Lowber, and Superintendent Campbell sent a detective for him. The detective found him at Nellie Stoothoff's, next door to the barber's residence, and conducted him to Police Headquarters. The barber failed to identify him, but said that he thought it was another aged gentleman, closely resembling Mr. Lowber, whom he had seen calling next door. Mr. Lowber denied that he had entered the barber's apartments, and he was discharged.

Mr. Nolan expresses his determination to prosecute Mr. Lowber as strongly as possible for the alleged assault on Friday night, when, as he says, Mr. Lowber fired two shots at him. The case is to come before the next Grand Jury.

AN ENGLISHMAN'S SUICIDE.

Losing his Fortune in Liverpool and Cutting his Throat in Hoboken.

George Purvis committed suicide by cutting his throat at 2 o'clock yesterday morning in the residence of his brother, Edward Purvis, at 130 Washington street, Hoboken. George Purvis was formerly a merchant in Liverpool, where his wife and children still reside. Owing, it is alleged, to the conduct of his partner, he lost his entire fortune. About four months ago he came to this country in search of employment, and went to live with his brother, who is well known in Hoboken. As he did not succeed in his efforts to find remunerative work, he became despondent, and was subject to prolonged fits of melancholy. He finally obtained a position with a firm of butchers in this city, and he was to have reported for duty yesterday morning. His spirits seemed to revive. Before daylight yesterday Edward Purvis heard a fall in his brother's room, and entering the apartment found George Purvis lying dead on the floor with a terrible gash across his throat. Two razors, one stained with blood, lay near. He had evidently been sitting on the bed when he cut his throat.

THE HUDSON RIVER TUNNEL.

The Work to be Continued on the Original Plan—Effects of the Accident.

"Everything is now ready for the resumption of work in the tunnel," said Mr. Haskin, President of the Hudson River Tunnel Company, yesterday. "We have succeeded in removing all the water from the tunnel, the air lock has been repaired, and we are now using it as before. In digging an excavation nine feet deep under the caisson we have come to the brickwork at the bottom of the temporary entrance to the tunnel, and it is not damaged in the least."

Workmen were engaged yesterday in repairing the break in the entrance wall. Mr. Anderson, who has examined the tunnel, says that it is just as he last saw it before the accident, and no damage has been done to it. Work is to be continued on the original plan. It is expected that the bodies of the buried workmen not yet recovered will be found in a few days.

Fond of Attacking Policemen.

James Edwards, a policeman of the Thirty-seventh street police station, found a crowd of men standing on the corner of Seventh avenue and Twenty-seventh street, at 11½ o'clock Sunday evening. He ordered them to move on. One of them, Eugene O'Hara, sprang on him and seized his club. The others closed in about him, and they threw Edwards down, kicked him in the face, and beat him severely with his own club. He was stunned when they left him, but made his way to the station house.

An hour later Policeman John Hooks of the Twentieth street station passed near the same corner. The gang made a rush for him. Hooks had heard about Edwards, and knew what to expect. He fired two shots at them and capped for aid. The crowd scattered. Hooks seized O'Hara and cowed him with the revolver. Policeman Hanlon came up and caught John Haggart. Edwards appeared in the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday with a badly swollen face and a cut head.

O'Hara was committed for trial. Haggart was fined $10 and committed to Blackwell's Island for two months.

Cheering Garfield, Grant, and Even the Bribe.

At a Republican meeting in Greenville, N. J., one evening last week, Matthew Armstrong, the Ferry street leather merchant, presided. At the opening of the meeting cheers were given for Garfield and Grant, and then a prominent member of the club called out, "Three cheers for $20." They were given.
