THE SLAVE OF A FORGER.

ENGRAVER SMYTHE'S DESCRIPTION OF WHAT HE HAS BEEN.

His Story of How he Fell into the Power of Brockway the Counterfeiter—The Scheme to Forge U. S. Bonds that has Just been Unearthed—Arraignments in Brooklyn.

Jasper Owen, one of the four alleged counterfeiters under arrest for issuing counterfeit $100 bank notes and Government six per cent. $1,000 coupon bonds, was taken before United States Commissioner Allen, in Brooklyn, yesterday, for examination. Owing to the large number of election cases which Mr. Allen has on hand, and the non-arrival of some of the forged bonds from Chicago, where they were seized on Thursday last, when J. B. Doyle was arrested, the examination was adjourned until Nov. 11, and Owen was released on $5,000 bail. Owen is short and thick set, with active blue eyes and a drooping moustache. He has been shadowed by secret service detectives for over a year, and for some months has been under their eye nearly all of the time. Accurate reports from the secret service men to Chief Brooks, in Washington, showing the travels of Owens, his associates, his visits to notorious counterfeiters, and his various other doings, led that official to say, "If Owen is not a crooked man, he is the most mysterious man in America." Owen, two years ago, bought the house in East New York where he was arrested. He has kept himself aloof from his neighbors, and at the Brooklyn Post Office he had a box under the name of Joseph Owen. To a SUN reporter, in the presence of his counsel, Noah Tebbetts, Owen yesterday said:

"I wish to deny that I have ever had anything to do with counterfeiters. I knew a man named Spencer, who since my arrest I have been told is William E. Brockway, but I did not know him by that name, and did not know that he was known as a counterfeiter. I am a machinist and engineer and not a printer. I know nothing about printing, and I have never printed any counterfeit money or bonds. For two years I have been improving my place in East New York. I recently imported a quantity of cigars, and I went about the country trying to dispose of them. I did not know Doyle or Smythe, the engraver."

The secret service detectives say of Owen that there is no positive proof against him, but that the circumstantial evidence is so strong that if he were accused of murder he would probably be adjudged guilty. Owen was believed to be the printer in the gang, of which William E. Brockway was the controlling member, William H. Smythe the engraver, and J. B. Doyle the outside agent. Owen was watched closely, because the detectives thought that he had the plate of the $100 counterfeit national bank note which they were trying to run down. A counterfeiter from Vermont, who was employed by Detective Drummond, chief of the New York Bureau, to assist in hunting out the nest of counterfeiters who were issuing the $100 notes, said that Owen told him that he was printing these notes, and on one of his trips Owen was followed to Vermont, whither he went to visit this informant. A detective, representing himself as a night watchman, hired apartments opposite Owen's house, and took possession of them every morning at 6 o'clock. He remained all day with a pair of opera glasses in his hand, looking through holes in the window curtain at Owen's house, expecting to discover some clue to the printing. One day early last week Owen was not seen to leave the house, as was usual, and the detective at once concluded that he had begun more printing. For three days he watched the house, but there was no sign of Owen. The detective then was sure that he had his man cornered, and he expected at the nick of time to walk in and seize the plate, the presses, and the counterfeit money. Having sent word to his fellow detectives, a raid was made upon the house about a week ago. To the surprise and disgust of the detectives, nothing was found, and Owen was not there. Having revealed their pursuit of Owen, the detectives could do nothing but occupy the house, prevent any one leaving it, and wait for Owen's return.

William H. Smythe, who has turned United States evidence, is one of the most celebrated engravers in this country, and until recently has not been under suspicion. He was a schoolmate of William E. Brockway, and for fifteen years he says he has been Brockway's slave. He seems to welcome the opportunity to make a clean breast of his connection with the counterfeiters, and in the form of affidavits he has furnished Assistant United States District Attorney Angell with what promises, when published, to be a most interesting history. Smythe is an educated man, and for some time he has lived in Brooklyn, surrounded by many friends who have long admired his talents. He was known as Charles Smith to some of these. Smythe is an elderly man, of prepossessing appearance. He is portly, has a high forehead and a bald head, a winning face, and wears mutton-chop side whiskers, and dresses well. He has confessed to engraving the plate for the counterfeit $100 bank note, the six per cent. bonds, the seven-thirty bonds which were put upon the market in 1867, and all of Brockway's work. Brockway induced him to do some engraving, he says, fifteen years ago, and when he finished the work he found that he was in the hands of a man with an iron will and a relentless purpose to hold him in his power forever. Brockway laid out work for Smythe to do, and when the latter objected, threatened to turn him over to justice for his first crime. The more Smythe did, the greater became the power of Brockway to hold him. Brockway began five years ago, it is said, to plan the great bond forgery that he was just bringing to completion when arrested. He chose the six per cent. bonds, which are redeemable next year, on the theory (which has proved correct) that this year there would be a demand for them. Brockway doubtless believed that he would become a millionaire out of this operation. The Government officers discovered among themselves as to whether the $204,000 in $1,000 Government bonds captured from Doyle in Chicago on Thursday are genuine or spurious. Smythe was kept at work upon the plate, and Brockway compelled him to labor with his utmost skill. Accordingly Smythe was several years doing the work. He worked as long upon the plate of the $100 bank note. This, it is conceded, is one of the most perfect pieces of counterfeiting ever done. The receiving teller of the Broadway National Bank took one of the bills last Saturday and a week ago.

"Lay this counterfeit alongside a genuine bill," said Detective Drummond yesterday, "and no one can tell the difference. The counterfeit is detected by measurement only. The figure on the right is a little too high. The letter 'T' in the right hand tablet is just twice the distance below the big 'C' that it should be. The yardarm of the vessel in this picture on the left should point between these two curling lines, whereas it points below them, and the drops of water from the oar in the small boat should be one on each side of the oar, instead of both on one side as in the counterfeit."

William E. Brockway, alias Edward Spencer, was not taken from Raymond street jail yesterday, but he will probably be taken before Commissioner Allen to-day that his examination may be adjourned. Brockway has a commanding figure, bright, piercing eyes, bushy white beard and hair, a high forehead and an intellectual face. A gentleman well known in Brooklyn society discovered yesterday that Mr. Spencer, to whom he had shown much attention, was Brockway the forger. "I never was more shocked," he said. "I have deemed it a high honor to know this man, and have praised him for his education, his gentlemanly manners, and his apparent fine sense of honor. I have looked upon him as the equal of any man in America."

Brockway has enjoyed his freedom since 1867, when he was caught in the forgery of seven-thirty bonds. He pursued different methods from other counterfeiters, and proceeded slowly and with caution. He did not handle any of the counterfeit money after it was printed, and never, it is said, passed a dollar of it. The secret service agents tried in vain, through professional counterfeiters, to buy some of the counterfeit $100 notes in bulk, but the counterfeiters could not fill the order. Brockway's plan was to have the counterfeits deposited in Western banks, and have the certificates of deposit rapidly cashed. The bills thus proceeded from banks, and were freely accepted. A large amount of them, it is believed, are still in circulation as genuine notes, and the plate has not been recovered. From time to time Brockway changed the banks whose notes he counterfeited, and the list of banks thus far known includes the Pittsfield National Bank of Pittsfield, Mass.; the Second National Bank of Wilkesbarre, Pa.; the National Exchange Bank of Baltimore, and the Pittsburgh National Bank of Pittsburgh, Pa. Brockway, it is said, always forged the names of the officers of the bank himself, doing it so skillfully that many of them pronounced the signatures upon the counterfeit bills to be genuine.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27.—A number of the $1,000 coupon bonds found in the possession of J. B. Doyle, when arrested in Chicago, have been examined by the officers of the secret service and by experts in the loan division of the Treasury Department, who pronounce them remarkably good counterfeits. No one but an expert, they say, would be likely to detect their spurious character. Smythe, who engraved the plate, said that originally thirty coupons were on the bonds. When taken from Doyle there was but one coupon attached. The others had been cut off in a jagged way to look as though they had been clipped, one at a time. It is not considered that this one coupon could be detected as counterfeit anywhere. Doyle will have an examination to-morrow in Chicago. Brockway will also be examined to-morrow in Brooklyn. The twenty-seven $100 notes found in Doyle's valise were also forwarded to the secret service. They were found to be genuine, and sent back to Chicago.

What is to be Done with Fulton Market?

Judge Van Brunt, in the Chambers of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday, heard testimony upon an application made by the Fire Commissioners, upon the report of a commission appointed to investigate the condition of Fulton Market, for authority to tear down the building and erect another upon its site. The application was opposed by the Corporation Counsel, representing the city, upon the ground that the present building could be repaired so as to be serviceable for many years, and thus save a large expense to the city. N. Le Brun and Mr. Esterbrook, Inspector of Buildings, testified that the building was in an unsafe condition, and could not advantageously be repaired. Decision was reserved.

Athletes in Jersey City.

The first annual fall games of the Scottish-American Athletic Club of Jersey City were played on the club's grounds at Ninth and Erie streets on Tuesday afternoon. Notwithstanding the threatening weather there was a very good assemblage of spectators present, including many ladies. The final heat of the 100-yard handicap run was won by L. E. Meyers, Manhattan Athletic Club (scratch), by 5 feet in 10 seconds. The two-mile handicap bicycle race was won with ease by F. P. Bauer, Manhattan Bicycle Club (scratch), in 9 minutes 19½ seconds. The one-mile handicap walk resulted in favor of W. Boag, Scottish-American Athletic Club, Jersey City (1 minute 5 seconds), in 8 minutes 28½ seconds. In putting the 16-pound shot D. T. Kidder beat two other competitors by throwing the shot 29 feet 4 inches. Nine contestants started in the half-mile handicap run; R. McCaffrey, Manhattan Athletic Club (scratch), won by six inches from W. Newbrough; time, 2 minutes 10½ seconds. The 220-yard hurdle race was won by M. G. Gilligan, Union Athletic Club (5 yards), in 28¾ seconds; the three-mile handicap walk by D. Lehane, Scottish-American A. C. of N. Y.; the running broad jump by M. C. Johnson (17 feet 1 inch); the quarter of a mile handicap by L. E. Meyers, Manhattan Athletic Club (scratch), in 52 seconds. In the three-mile exhibition run Chas. Price, champion ten-mile runner of the world, made the distance in the slow time of 16 minutes 42 seconds. Gold and silver medals were awarded.
