ELEVATED TRAINS IN THE FOG.

Testimony as to the Safeguards Against Accidents on the High Roads.

An inquest was held yesterday by Coroner Herrman in the case of Edward M. Cooper, the engineer who was killed in a collision on the Second avenue elevated railway on the morning of Oct. 11. The jury was supposed to be composed, so far as was possible, of men acquainted with the management of railways. There were three trains concerned in the collision. The first went slowly on account of the fog to avoid running into the train in front. The second, although going slowly, ran into the first, the engineer, Chas. W. Randall, not having seen it by reason of the fog. Then Cooper's train crashed into the second train, damaging its rear car and wrecking Cooper's locomotive.

Andrew Diamond, foreman of the Knickerbocker Ice Company, who saw the collision, testified that at the time of the accident the fog was not so dense but that he could see an object 125 feet distant.

Walter H. Thomas, engineer on the first of the trains that were in collision, testified that he left Harlem at 7:09 A. M. and ran to 111th street station at the rate of eleven miles an hour. The fog became so dense that after leaving that station he reduced his speed to six or eight miles. The fog grew so much denser that he went very slowly near Ninety-second street, for fear of running into the train ahead. It was there that his train was struck by the train behind. He felt only a slight push. In foggy weather, the engineers of the road are instructed to run slowly and use judgment. The witness had run as fast as twenty-two miles an hour. The rules prohibit going faster than twenty-five miles. Engineers are expected to know the rules regulating their duties, but do not get the manual until after they are hired, and are never examined by anybody as to their knowledge. The witness had been for seven years an engineer on the Boston and Maine Railway. The firemen also have rules regulating their duties. In foggy weather signals are used, but there are no flagmen along the road to give warning of delay or accident. During a fog the "shadow" of a car is seen before the rear red signal light if there is one. When running at the rate of twenty miles an hour a train can be stopped within its own length. Whistles are sometimes used in foggy weather, but the witness did not have faith in fog horns.

Murray Boom, conductor on the same train, confirmed the foregoing testimony, adding that a red bull's-eye and a hand lamp, both lighted, were at the end of the rear car at the time of the collision.

Chas. W. Randall, engineer on the second train, who said that he had had nearly eight years' experience, testified that he left Harlem at 7:12 A. M., three minutes after Thomas's train. It was very foggy, and below 111th street he reduced speed to seven or eight miles an hour. It was on an up grade that he caught sight of the train ahead. He reversed his engine and put on brakes, whistling to his brakemen to put on the hand brakes. This did not prevent his engine from running against the rear car of Thomas's train, but he only gave it a slight push. The forward train (Thomas's) went ahead out of sight. When Randall started to go on, his locomotive broke away from the train, the coupling pin having dropped out. A man was sent back to warn the train behind; but before Randall could connect his motor with his train, Cooper's motor crashed into the rear car. The witness did not think he had been delayed more than a minute when he was struck. He attributed the accident to the fog. Had the coupling pin not come out of the train, would have been cut of the way of Cooper's train. The shock of the collision was sufficient to throw the witness's locomotive six feet forward. The witness thought signal men should be employed along the train, but did not think that a brakeman on the rear car could have prevented the collision. Even if the rules of the company are followed, accidents may happen in foggy weather.

Wm. H. Moon, conductor on Randall's train, said that he sent a man back to signal the train following as soon as Randall's engine had struck the train ahead. He saw the man disappear in the fog. His further testimony confirmed Randall's.

Isaac D. Noe, the brakeman who was sent back to flag Cooper's train, said that he ran back, flag in hand, and then walk beside the track, and, when the approaching train passed him, shouted to Cooper to shut off steam. The latter seemed to reverse his engine, but to no purpose. Hearing the noise of the collision, the witness went on further, and succeeded in flagging and stopping the next train.

Edward Nicholson, fireman on Cooper's locomotive, said that his train left Harlem at 7:15 o'clock. He ran to 111th street at the rate of eight miles an hour. At about Ninety-second street he saw the end of the train in front. Cooper reversed his engine, and the witness jumped for the running board, which he reached when the trains struck. He saw nothing more of Cooper until he saw him lying in the street. The witness thought Cooper a capable engineer, and that he was a man of good habits. Cooper did not reverse his engine until within eight or ten feet of the train ahead.

The following was the verdict:

We find that the death of Edward Cooper was caused by a collision on Oct. 11, 1890, the train of which he was engineer colliding with one at Ninety-second street and Second avenue. We think that the rules of the road have occurred if proper precautions had been taken by the company in allowing more time to intervene between the despatching of trains in foggy weather.

We, therefore, recommend as a remedy, that each and every train an employee of the company be stationed upon the rear platform to aid in preventing future accidents; and we further suggest that no doors of any car shall be locked or fastened in any way while in use.

PILFERERS IN A CLUB HOUSE.

A Series of Thefts by Bell Boys of the Knickerbocker Club.

During the past three months numerous thefts have been committed in the Knickerbocker Club, 249 Fifth avenue. Private drawers of members were opened, letters stolen, and articles taken. In July the cashier's desk was broken open, and $290 taken. Members missed penknives, cigars, silver match boxes, silk handkerchiefs, and various sums of money. This occasioned much annoyance, but the matter was not brought to police attention until a satchel in the room of Allan T. Rice was cut open and rifled. A diamond ring, set with a very large ruby, worth $1,000, and a horseshoe set with diamonds and sapphires, worth $500, were stolen therefrom. There was no clue to the thief, but it was plain that it had been committed by some one of the club servants. Application was made to Inspector Byrnes, at Police Headquarters, and Detective Golden was detailed. He procured a boy whom he caused to be hired as a bell boy in the club. The young detective caught James La Costa, a bell boy, in the act of stealing a silver match box.

Mr. Alonzo C. Munson, the Vice-President of the club, took La Costa to one side and questioned him. He confessed, and implicated Emile J. Seyffert, another bell boy, and Albert Sprague, a bell boy who had been discharged a month before.

La Costa said that Sprague had been the instigator of the thefts. Sprague had said the members were wealthy, and taking little things from them was of no account. Sprague had a large number of keys which fitted nearly every lock in the house.

Seyffert also confessed. He admitted that he had stolen the jewelry from Mr. Rice's room, and said he did not know its value, and had given it to a friend who had broken up the settings. Seyffert also accused Sprague of being the one who first induced him to commit the thefts.

Sprague was arrested, and the three were brought to the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday. Sprague is 16 years of age, and lives at 167 Ludlow street. La Costa is 16, and lives at Third avenue and 110th street. He was dressed in the uniform and buttons of the club.

Seyffert is 19 years of age, and lives at 608 East Ninth street.

All are intelligent, bright-looking boys. They pleaded guilty. Seyffert was committed for grand larceny, and the others for petit larceny. The three boys were employed by the club in July last. They received their board and $14 a month, besides gratuities. Sprague denies having instigated the thefts.

The Wrong Man Served.

The mechanics' lien which was filed by Messrs. Westing and Havens against the Long Island Historical Society for work, labor, and materials furnished for the new building at Pierrepont and Hicks streets, Brooklyn, was foreclosed, and a judgment was obtained by default. Justice Gilbert yesterday set aside the judgment on the ground that the papers had been improperly served upon the Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs, the President of the Society, whose interest in the building was immaterial.

Obsequies of Gov. Williams.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 22.—The remains of Gov. Williams were taken from the Washington club Rooms at 11:30 A. M. to the Court House, where they lie in state until 5 P. M. The procession was composed of a platoon of police, the Adjutant-general and Quartermaster-General with their respective aids, a band, the Light Infantry, the Jefferson Club, citizens on foot, a special guard of eight policemen, four bearer and pall bearers, relatives of the deceased, Gov. Gray, State officers, and citizens in carriages.

METHODS OF PASTORAL WORK.

Views of Baptist Ministers—Some Account of Devil Worshippers in Asia.

"The Pastor and his Work" was the subject of the Rev. Christopher Rhodes's essay, read yesterday in the Baptist ministers' weekly conference. He treated only of that part of a pastor's work that consists in visiting from house to house. Neither the essayist nor those who spoke afterward on the subject, however, seemed to think that the Baptist pastor's visits should go beyond the bounds of church membership in Baptist churches. The Rev. Mr. Rhodes believed that pastoral visitation is a good thing, because it is good exercise for the minister to walk around, and then, again, because it is necessary, in order to retain the sympathies of the people. Many parishioners drift into skepticism because the minister does not visit them and warm them into sympathy by personal contact. Questions raised in the mind by sophistry go unanswered, and the first thing the minister knows his people slip away from him. People who are young in the Christian life are lambs, and they need nursing. Then the essayist briefly outlined his own method in visiting his parishioners. He divided the city into four districts, and began with district number one. He visited every family in this district once, even if he had to go for a third time to find them at home, before he passed to the next district. In this way he called on each family at least twice in a year. He stayed never longer than ten minutes, and used his common sense as to praying and reading the Bible.

The Rev. G. W. Samson of Harlem said that he walked from four to ten miles every day, and it kept him healthy. It keeps the flesh and the spirit in the right condition.

The Rev. J. B. Smith of Peekskill said that he had found that people care more for a social call than for a religious visit. The chief trouble was that each church member wanted to be noticed as much as the others.

The Rev. Mr. Woods said that he got his deacons to organize visiting committees in the church, and they did that kind of pastoral work for him.

The Rev. Mr. Bourne thought that a minister ought to be a thoroughly jolly good fellow. He ought not to gossip, but he ought to get into the confidence of the family.

The Rev. W. H. Roberts, a returned missionary from the Cochin tribes in the eastern foothills of the Himalaya Mountains, gave some account of that remote and almost unknown people. Their numbers no one knows, but there are millions of them. They resemble the Chinese in intelligence, but they have no written language. He had been for eighteen months at work in reducing their language to writing. The people hold all the mountains of western China, and levy blackmail on the Chinese who have to pass through the country. The Cochins live by clans, and there is no union among them. They cultivate the soil on the mountains, and are gaining ground on the Burmese, as they are individually the stronger. They are quick and quite intelligent. They say that they have no religion. Yet they sacrifice buffaloes, bullocks, chickens, and dogs to the devil. In fact, they are devil worshippers. These sacrifices are to appease the devil, and they say in sacrificing: "Oh, evil spirit, go away, and don't come back again."

The Rev. Mr. Roberts's wife died of jungle fever on the return to this country, and his own health is broken down. He hopes to return next year to the same field of labor with another missionary. He was so weak yesterday that he could scarcely be heard across the room when he spoke.

A Contest for a Child.

When the parents of Mary Louise Marsland died in Brooklyn, she was claimed by her stepmother, who is a Roman Catholic, and her aunt, who is a Protestant. She was very young, and both relatives were anxious to assume her guardianship. As her father's dying request was that she should be reared as a Roman Catholic, the stepmother claimed her, but the aunt, who was wealthy, offered advantages for the child which the stepmother did not possess. The question as to which relative should be the guardian was submitted to Surrogate Livingston, in Brooklyn, and he decided yesterday that, for the sake of the child's welfare, the aunt should be her guardian, but that, nevertheless, the dying request of the father must be heeded, and the child must be brought up in the Roman Catholic faith.
