PARDONING LIFE CONVICTS.

The Connecticut Legislature Wearied by Petitions from the Wethersfield State Prison—The Stories of Two Pardoned Prisoners.

HARTFORD, April 3.—Entering one of the rooms of the Capitol building in this city some days ago, I saw a committee of the Legislature sitting behind a railing, with a number of country folks from the interior of the State grouped around them. The gentlemen of the committee appeared to be wrestling with the problem how to make themselves comfortable. One was peeling and eating an apple, while another had his feet on the railing, his chair tilted back, and his head concealed under the broad and projecting windowsill, so that the audience saw no head at all, but had a fine view of a good-sized pair of shoes.

These gentlemen belonged to the Committee on the State Prison, and they were hearing testimony upon a petition for pardon preferred by a life convict at Wethersfield. There were witnesses in favor of the petition and others opposed to it. There was testimony as to the convict's past, his present, and the probable complexion of his future character, his conduct in prison, circumstances in extenuation of his crime, and the genuineness or spuriousness of his asserted reformation.

This scene appears to have been one that was of frequent occurrence for many years past. The pardoning power has been vested in the Legislature, and that body has been appealed to persistently year after year by every convict capable of bringing any influence to bear. As might be expected under such conditions, the pardoning power has been exerted in a slovenly and indiscreet manner, and every year it has been growing more of a white elephant. The conviction that some changes ought to be made in this state of affairs has now shown itself in a bill that has just passed the Senate, creating a Board of Pardons, to be composed of the Governor, a Judge of the Supreme Court, and a member of the Board of Charities, in whom the pardoning power is to be exclusively vested. Pardons shall be granted only by unanimous vote of the Board; and after a petition has been once decided upon, the adjudication shall be final, and a second petition from the same convict shall not be entertained except upon grounds similar to those required for obtaining a new trial in a court of law, such as newly discovered evidence, or facts that have occurred since the last hearing.

In the argument upon the bill it was shown that, on an average, thirty-five petitions from convicts, with all the resulting committee hearings and proceedings, were considered by the Legislature every year, many being petitions that had been heard and decided adversely over and over again, while some had been brought up regularly every session for ten years. The Warden of the State prison volunteered the information that the weeks before, during, and after each session of the Legislature were invariably weeks of excitement and unrest, subversive of all proper prison work and discipline among the convicts, who would have their petition drawn up and sent into the Assembly on general principles and with a reckless hope that something might come of them. Since 1872 fifty-five prisoners have obtained pardons in this way, among them a number of convicts under sentence of imprisonment for life. In the last twenty years not less than twenty-nine life prisoners have been pardoned. "It is such releases by the General Assembly," said one of the members of the Legislature, "that keeps that barbarous punishment, hanging, upon the statute book."

Two pardons for life prisoners have been granted during the past week, notwithstanding the bitterest opposition. One of the men was Charles J. Allen, who killed his brother at New Milford in a trivial quarrel 16 years ago. Before that he had been in prison as a deserter from the army, and his reputation had been bad generally. After sentence for murder, however, his record seems to have been exemplary. He was hospital steward in the prison for ten years, and is said to have acquitted himself well in that position. He also saved the prison at one time from a desperate insurrection led by two of the most reckless of the convicts, by giving an alarm in the very nick of time and helping actively in subduing the outbreak. He has served sixteen years of his life term.

Upon this record, and also upon the ground that his crime was only manslaughter and not murder, a claim that the facts of the case seem to corroborate, his petition for a pardon has received the support of newspapers, clergymen, the prison officials, and a large array of philanthropic persons. A resolution for his pardon has repeatedly been passed by one branch of the Legislature for former years, and failed in the other; but this year the influence arrayed in his support proved too strong to be resisted. This is not to say, however, that his pardon was not vigorously opposed. The good folks of New Milford, where the murder was committed, sent in a petition, bearing with 500 signatures, protesting against the pardon. They also came up personally to lobby against it, and their representatives denounced it in long speeches. They professed to be in fear of their lives and property if Allen should be released. It is not often that a contest over a convict's pardon becomes so spirited. To such lengths did it go that some of the benevolent and religious people of this city have deemed it necessary to pray in church for the hard-hearted citizens of New Milford.

The New Milforders, on the other hand, asserted that the sympathy of Allen's supporters was of a maudlin character, and accused the prison officials of petting him and of letting him sleep in a barn outside of the prison walls; and they want to know whether that's the way life convicts are guarded at Wethersfield.

When Allen left the prison Thursday morning he received $200 contributed by the officers and instructors in the institution, a silver watch from another sympathizer, and $100 from a member of the Legislature.

The other life convict that has been pardoned is John B. Johnson, a native of Sweden, 40 years of age, and consumptive. Mr. Welch, representative from Torrington, stated the case thus: "Johnson is undergoing a life sentence for killing a lady in 1872, in Meriden. The reputation of the lady killed was not firstclass." The Speaker of the Assembly showed deep interest in the case, and left the chair to tell Johnson's story and make a fervid appeal for him. He expressed the opinion that "the man who murders—who enters with deliberate violence into the sanctity of a life—should decidedly, thoroughly, be hung, decidedly and without delay." But he did not think Johnson's a case of murder. "Johnson," he said, "is of a noble family. His father gambled away his property, and his mother died broken hearted. The prisoner resigned his commission as Lieutenant in the Swedish army, and came to the United States. He attempted farming in Illinois, but through ignorance of the language became bankrupt. He then drifted to Meriden in this State. Becoming indebted to his landlady for board, he was put out of the house and told he could not have his personal effects. He asked for his prayer book, which had been given him by his mother, and a photograph of an only sister. Instead of complying, his landlady tried to force him out of the place. As he came back into the barroom she picked up a large water pitcher and advanced toward him. He had at that moment in his hand a knife with which he had been cutting tobacco, and with this he struck her, severing the spinal cord. She died in twenty-four hours. He then wandered about the streets until arrested by a policeman. Sentenced to prison for the term of his natural life, he has now served nine years, yet his crime was, at the utmost, manslaughter. He is now an invalid with probably only a few years to live, and threatened with insanity, and his counsel and friends have promised that, if released, they will not leave him until a steamer having him on board and bound for Europe shall leave its dock in New York. He refuses to reveal the name his mother bore, saying that he preferred to rot rather than to bring more disgrace upon his family name. He now asks only the sweet boon that he may die on his native soil, and that his ashes may mingle with those of his dead mother."

The committee that considered Johnson's petition decided in its favor only by the casting vote of the Chairman, but the resolution was more favorably viewed in the full Houses. It is said that money enough to pay for Johnson's return to Sweden was deposited before the presentation of his petition so that the Legislature might feel assured of his making the journey if released.

These may be the last convicts pardoned by the Legislature of this State.

A MAD DOG'S LONG RUN.

Biting Children, Cattle, and Dogs in his Way Through Two States.

WARWICK, N. Y., April 3.—The mad dog which caused so much excitement in Sussex County, N. J., about two weeks ago, made his appearance in this town last week.

He was first seen in Belleville, near this village, where he attacked a dog belonging to Henry Houston, and bit it several times. Mr. Houston's dog afterward became rabid, and was killed. At Stone Bridge a valuable dog was bitten, and was killed by the owner immediately. The dog ran along slowly, frothing at the mouth and snapping and barking. He came up the Ridge road, stopping at Malcom Duffie's just long enough to bite a dog which was at the barn, and then came on toward Warwick. In this village he is said to have bitten many dogs. He also gave chase to a party of school children but hearing a dog bark in the yard of Mr. Dunning, he ran in and bit it. He bounded over a fence into an adjoining field, and attacked two valuable high grade Alderney cows, singling these out with a strange fatality, he bit both of them, without disturbing the others. Mr. Dunning, the owner of the cattle, saw on the next day that something was the matter with the cattle, and, suspecting that they had been bitten, had them placed in the stable.

Not long afterward when he visited them they were lying on the floor of the stable gritting their teeth. Occasionally they would rise up and plunge madly around the stable and then sink back on the floor apparently exhausted. To end their misery Mr. Dunning shot them.

From the farm of Mr. Dunning the rabid animal ran toward a yearling calf on an adjoining farm and, it is supposed, bit it. He next visited Edenville, biting a great many dogs on the way and stirring up a general commotion.

At Edenville, the dog bit two children who were walking along the road. They have been put under treatment, and it is thought their lives will be saved.

After the dog started from Florida no further trace of him could be found. He disappeared as mysteriously as he did after his raid through Sussex County to Port Jervis.

From all around this vicinity and adjoining county of Sussex come reports of rabid dogs and their raids. The people are badly scared, and are killing off nearly all the dogs, whether bitten or not. There is talk of forming an organization to exterminate all dogs in this section of the country.

Wanted—Females.
