GABRIEL WINTER'S WILL.

Found Twenty Years After his Death, and Identified by One of the Witnesses.

The old New York lawyer, Gabriel Winter, who died twenty years ago, and, as it was believed at the time, left no will disposing of his large estate in this city and in Flushing, did make a will, as it seems, and the other day it tumbled out of the back of an old law book, taken from the shelf by his son-in-law. Mr. Winter owned a mansion house in Flushing, where he lived in summer with his wife, two sons, and a daughter, while in winter he lived in his house in Fourteenth street. One son died, and the daughter married John Livingston, so William Winter only was left to the couple. Mr. Winter died in his Fourteenth street residence on Feb. 27, 1862, and on May 19 following, William Winter and John Livingston procured letters of administration on the estate from the Surrogate of Queens County. No will being found, the property was divided among the heirs at law. The daughter, John Livingston's wife, had died, and the heirs at law were Gabriel Winter's widow, Jane Winter, and his son, William Winter. Jane Winter died in September of the year in which her husband died.

In her will Daniel D. Lord and George Deforest Lord were named as trustees. The latter refused to serve, and the New York Supreme Court appointed Andrew Boardman of the law firm of Boardman & Boardman to fill the vacancy. Mrs. Winter's will gave the income of all her share of the property to her sister, Mrs. Cornfield, on whose death it was to be paid to her son, William Winter, and on his death her two grandchildren, Mortimer and Henry J. Livingston, were to receive it, share and share alike. The amount was not large. Mrs. Cornfield died, and the income has since been paid to William Winter by Mr. Boardman.

Mr. Boardman was sitting in his law office on the 10th ult., when John Livingston entered and in excitement said that he had found on that morning the will of Gabriel Winter. He had taken from its place in the library an old quarto volume of the very early statutes of the State of New York. The book had belonged to Gabriel Winter's father, and his name was written in it. In taking the book from the shelf, Mr. Livingston said, he noticed that a paper was in the back of the book, between the cover and a fly leaf, and on looking closer he saw that the paper was slightly gummed to the book, so that it formed a sort of portfolio. Looking inside of this pocket he saw two paper packages—a large and a small one. The smaller package was a sheet of letter paper, folded and sealed with little wax seals in the manner in which letters were sent through the mails before envelopes came into common use. On the back was Mrs. Jane Winter's name. The wax seals were very thin, and they had grown so brittle that they broke when they were touched. The letter was signed by Gabriel Winter, and it briefly directed Mrs. Winter to take the accompanying document, which was his last will and testament, to the Surrogate and let him open it.

"Did you break open the letter?" asked Mr. Boardman.

Mr. Livingston replied that he did not know what he might have done in his excitement at the time.

"On looking at the will," said Mr. Boardman to a SUN reporter, yesterday, "I was, of course, very much surprised, and a number of things flashed through my mind. I had never seen Gabriel Winter write, although I had seen his writing many times, and knew its characteristics. I certainly had no knowledge or suspicion that Gabriel Winter had left a will. I saw at once it was a holograph will—that is, it was entirely in Mr. Winter's handwriting; even the certificates for the witnesses to sign were written by him. The will was dated March 27, 1830. The witnesses' names were G. G. Van Wagenen of 28 Pine street and Thomas L. Wills of 39 Murray street, then a street of dwellings. The will briefly gave all Mr. Winter's property, real and personal, to his wife, Jane Winter, absolutely.

"Of course, I at once began search for Mr. Wills and Mr. Van Wagenen. They were both lawyers of high standing, and I had lost sight of them both for many years. If alive, they must be very old men. Fortunately I learned through my old lawyer friend, Sawyer, who is about the same age, that Mr. Wills lives in New Brunswick, N. J., and is between 80 and 90 years old. I visited him in his daughter's home, in this city, and showed the paper to him. He recognized his own signature and that of Mr. Van Wagenen. His law office in 1830, Mr. Wills said, was next door to Mr. Winter's office in Pine street. He remembered that Mr. Winter hurried into the office one day and asked him and Mr. Van Wagenen, who was present, to sign his will.

"Now, you see," added Mr. Boardman, "the property all goes to William Winter, because he is now his mother's sole heir. It has been feared by owners of real estate in Flushing, who have bought land from the heirs at law, that their titles are in danger. They are not; for, by a statute, unless a will be proven within four years after the death of a person, those who buy real estate conveyed by the will are protected."

The document is to be offered for probate before Surrogate Townsend of Queens County, in Jamaica, to-morrow. Mr. Wills and Mr. Livingston are to be present.

Work on the Hudson River Tunnel.

"Forty feet of the tunnel has been finished in the past week," said Foreman Horley of the Hudson River Tunnel yesterday. "It is the best week's work that we have yet done. The work on the north tunnel, which has not been for some time the second in forty, will be resumed to-day, and both tunnels will be carried along together. Two hundred and twenty men are employed, and this number will be increased to 300 by May 1. Engineer Latrobe has ordered 2,000 tons of iron, but been at work for the past week at the New York terminus, at the foot of Morton street."
