EVENING SHADES.
The whistles scream farewell to parting day,
The evening papers now to sell begin;
Through basement windows oft a glowing ray
Of lamp or gas reveals the scenes within.
Full many a nymph, as fair as e'er was seen,
Sighs o'er a sofa with its threads worn bare;
Full many a man of most majestic mien
Is doomed to shiver on a broken chair!
But thou, whose modest competence allows
Some means to please the taste for household art,
Adorn thy dwelling and delight thy spouse
By buying at the Brooklyn Company's mart.

GEMS FROM THE POETS—THOS. MOORE.
The board that once in Tara's halls
For kings and chiefs was spread,
The seats once ranged around those walls
Are now from vision fled.
But, oh! those seats, for ladies bright,
Princes and other swells,
Were three-legged stools, unpainted quite,
Or backless benches else.
Yet still each home fond relics makes
Of chattels of old days,
Until some fragile chair back breaks,
Or table leg decays.
Then is the pride of former years
To attic cell consigned,
And forth the man or matron steers,
The newest styles to find.
