EX-TELLER DOVELL'S STORY.

Some Alleged Facts in the History of the Broken Bank of Newark.

Many facts in the history of the bankrupt First National Bank of Newark are expected to be made public for the first time on the trial of a chancery suit that has just been begun. When the bank failed a year ago its break down was said to be largely due to the embezzlement, in 1874, of $90,000 of the bank's money by the receiving teller, Louis Dovell. The alleged defalcation was promptly discovered, but was kept a secret by the cashier, James A. Hedden, and certain directors in order, as has since been said, that Dovell might continue his business as a manufacturer of ink and mucilage, and make restitution from his earnings. Upon his withdrawal from the bank, Dovell and his mother assigned to it considerable property toward making up the loss which he was accused of having caused. Afterward he paid several thousand dollars from the profits of his business. When the alleged embezzlement became generally known last year, Dovell was exempt from indictment under the statute of limitations. He contended, however, that he had not robbed the bank of a dollar, and said to the United States Grand Jury, in Trenton, that he would like to be indicted that he might have an opportunity of proving his innocence.

Joseph Coult has filed a bill in chancery for Mrs. Mary A. Dovell, the mother of Louis Dovell. She asks for a full investigation of the accounts of her son, and of the alleged deficiency, the restoration of the property which she transferred to the bank, should it be found that he was not a defaulter, and an injunction restraining the receiver of the bank from ejecting her from her dwelling in Summer avenue, which she assigned to the bank in 1874, but has since had possession of.

An affidavit by Louis Dovell accompanies his mother's bill. It says the cashier frequently gave him memoranda purporting to represent cash, but which really did not, and directed him to hold them as cash items. The cashier told him that this device was adopted, with the approval of other officers, to swell the apparent amount of the deposits. In October, 1874, the tally list showed memoranda footing $150,000. The Bank Examiner was expected, and Cashier Hedden took the memoranda and gave checks, cash, and charge items in their place. That is, different banks were charged with certain sums to swell the assets, and in this way, and by the use of memoranda and borrowed checks, the assets were increased to over $200,000. After the examination Dovell received the memoranda again. The cashier said they had been used as a substitution for cash temporarily procured for the examination. The memoranda showed, Dovell says, a deficiency of $90,000 as compared with his former tally. This made him short this amount in his accounts. He says that he informed President Cook and Directors Greacen, McGregor, and Dickerson, and that they admitted knowing that the assets had been made to seem larger than they were, but said that in the list were certain memoranda of the cashier of which they had not been cognizant. Dovell says he told them he had done nothing wrong. He was willing, however, to indemnify the bank, pending an investigation. Property was then transferred to the bank, and he says he was promised an inquiry into the affair. This inquiry was never made.

Chancellor Runyon has set down Mrs. Dovell's bill for a hearing on Monday, April 18.

FARMER SNOOKS AND WIFE.

A Domestic Drama that Began at Tuttle's Corners and Ended in a Police Court.

PORT JERVIS, April 13.—Mr. J. C. Snooks is a well-known farmer of Tuttle's Corners, in Montague township, Sussex County, New Jersey. On Saturday night last his wife left his house and came to Port Jervis in company with William Williams. Mr. Snooks heard of her whereabouts and came on after her. At about 3 o'clock yesterday morning he learned that she was at the house of an old friend of the family. He then went to the Fowler House, awakened Judge Holbrook, and procured a warrant for the arrest of his wife, alleging that she had stolen and taken with her $105 belonging to him. Mrs. Snooks was arrested and lodged in jail. Before the time set for her examination she was taken before Judge Holbrook, and gave him $100 to pay to her husband. She made the following statement to Judge Holbrook:

"My maiden name was Emeline Euslin. I was married to John C. Snooks on Jan. 1, 1860, in Waymart, Wayne County, Pa. We moved to Sussex County, N. J., in the spring of 1860, and settled near Tuttle's Corners. I lived with my husband nine years, when we separated and lived apart for eight years, during which time I lived with my parents, in Wayne County, Pa. My husband urged me to go home several times. He had a housekeeper named Polly Bennett living with him. He tried to get a divorce, but I contested it and he failed. I lent him $30 to pay the expenses of the suit, and went to live with him again. He never paid the money back to me. He wanted me to stay and work for him, and I stayed. He said he expected to marry again. We lived together again as man and wife. We have five children, four boys and one girl. Last Saturday night I left home and came to Port Jervis, bringing $105 with me. I used $5 of this. I hired William Williams to bring me to Port Jervis, and gave him $1.50 for doing so. I started to go to my mother's at Waymart, Pa. My husband gave me the money to take care of. I had asked him to let me go to my mother's, and he refused. I could not stand it any longer, because the work was getting too hard for me. The doctor had forbidden me to work, and my husband would not hire any one to help me. It was 10 o'clock on Saturday night when I left home. Williams took my trunk away from the house for me. I positively did not elope with him. Williams told me on Monday night that he was going back to Hainesville, N. J., and I have not seen him since. I would go to my mother's if I had the money. My husband called me a thief, but I did not elope."

Mr. Snooks made a counter statement, saying, in substance: "My wife lent me only $16 or $17 to settle the divorce suit with, and it was paid back to her. I sent her word that I did not want her to come back. She did come, though, and stole some rolls of wool. She coaxed me to let her stay with me. I never called her a thief. She is at liberty to go home, or to her mother's, as she pleases."

Mr. Snooks had given his wife $3, and in the court room yesterday morning he gave her $5 more. She went before the Judge voluntarily and gave him the $100 which was handed over to Mr. Snooks. The Judge advised Mrs. Snooks to return to her home, and after a very pathetic scene the husband and wife shook hands.

VAN WERT'S DENVER BANK.

Accused of Planning a Gigantic Swindle—His Operations in Massachusetts.

DENVER, April 13.—A bank was incorporated here in February, with a capital of $100,000, and a supposed reserve fund of equal amount. James Van Wert was President, Ellen Van Wert cashier, and Pliny Rice, Horace Cotton, and P. Smith directors. The News says that these persons evidently had plans well advanced toward perpetrating a gigantic swindle. It says that Van Wert served six years in the Massachusetts penitentiary for passing counterfeit money. Subsequently he started a bogus bank in Winsted, Conn., he himself being President and his wife cashier. He disappeared, leaving many debts and swindling hundreds of people. Indictments for bigamy are pending over him, and he is accused of many other crimes. His associates, with the exception of Cotton and Smith, are of the same stripe. Rice is well known to the police, and there is an indictment against him at Leadville for obtaining money under false pretences.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., April 13.—Van Wert appeared here late in 1872, representing himself to be very wealthy. He gained the confidence of many, and began to deal in real estate. He bought a $5,000 residence on Carew street and houses and lots in various parts of the city, and laid out Lillian street. His method of buying property was to take Otis and Tolland wood lots, worth perhaps about $150 when cleared, sell them to some "pal" for, say $5,000, and take back a mortgage for $4,000 or so, reserving the right to go on and cut off wood for five years, and then negotiate for real estate in this city and work in these mortgages as payment, taking his victims to the registry and showing them that the deeds and mortgages were all correctly drawn. Men who were anxious to sell were easily caught in the net, and did not see through the game until obliged to foreclose to get their pay. Samuel Harris, the R. E. Ladd estate, the Bartletts, and others were badly nipped by his schemes. At one time he held $50,000 of real estate in the city. Among his other operations, Van Wert is said to have got a verdict against the Boston and Albany Railroad for lost freight, which was never shipped. The panic put an end to his career here. Ellen M. Van Wert is the daughter of a Bethel, Vt., farmer. She acted as Van Wert's housekeeper while he lived in this section, and after he had been divorced from his wife.

NEW VANS AND CHEAP CABS.

Trying One of Mr. Peter Herdic's Public Carriages in New York.

Yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock a curious-looking vehicle drove up to the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and was at once surrounded by people who began asking all sorts of questions as to its purpose and construction. It was the Herdic phaeton van, which is named after its inventor, Peter Herdic, and which was to make a trial trip as a preliminary to the establishment of a line of such vans in this city. The vehicle looks like a hobtail car on four carriage wheels, the hind wheels being unusually large and the body of the vehicle dropping considerably below the axle, so that the passenger can slip in easily.

"These vans," said a representative of Mr. Herdic to a Sun reporter, "are intended to render travel fast and easy. The single-horse Herdic weighs only 1,200 pounds, and a good horse can draw it with eight passengers six miles an hour. An ordinary stage weighs 3,000 pounds, requires two horses, and seats only twelve passengers. Mr. Herdic is building some two-horse vans weighing only 1,700 pounds, and carrying sixteen people. They are easy to draw, because the hind wheels are large and the body drops to within twenty inches of the ground. Three-fifths of the load is below the centre of the hub, and the rest is on the large wheels. There is no side motion, and the power of the horse is economized one-half. The fare will be five cents. Mr. Herdic has not yet determined on the route. Lines are now running in Cleveland and Washington. A feature will be that when the seats are occupied no one will be allowed to enter."

During the trial trip it was easy to get in and out of the van. It travelled rapidly, but did not run more smoothly than other vehicles.

Mr. Herdic's representative said further that Mr. Herdic was having his improvements applied to hansoms, and that he would soon establish a cheap line of hansoms in this city. Fares, he said, would be about what cab fares are in London, twenty-five cents for short distances.
