TABLEAUX IN ZION CHURCH.

A Trying Situation for King Solomon—The Opening of a Ten Days' Fair.

A series of tableaux by a number of ladies and gentlemen of the Zion African Methodist Episcopal Church, at Bleecker and West Tenth streets, on Monday, drew a profitable attendance. They were superintended by Miss Annie Tainsh, lately of London, who is endeavoring to raise $5,000 to establish a college in connection with Zion Church at Concord, N. C. The tableaux were a part of the church fair, which is to be continued every afternoon and evening for ten days.

Among those present were the pastor, the Rev. T. O. R. Williams, the Rev. Dr. Henry Highland Garnet, and the Rev. Mr. Anderson, a former pastor of the church. Simon J. Stokely, city editor of The Rumor, announced the first tableau as "Hannah presenting little Samuel to the High Priest." It was greeted with applause. The next tableau, which represented "David in the death chamber of his child, a story of very deep pathos," was not so successful, because some rude person in the gallery of the church cried out "Correct" in a peculiar voice, which made one of the lady attendants in the chamber of death laugh, and this in turn made some of the spectators laugh. In the next tableau Miss Van Brounk, robed in red, and with a long white lace veil depending from the crown upon her head, represented the Queen of Sheba standing before Solomon. The eyes of the latter strayed once away from the visitor to the spectators, and the muscles of his face began to twitch. The spectators, to many of whom he was personally known, smiled and some clapped their hands. This proved too much for his nerves, and after a heroic endeavor his features broke into a laugh and he threw back his head to indicate frankly that he had to give up the attempt. All the spectators then laughed in unison with him, and clapped their hands, while Miss Tainsh rang down the curtain. Those who sat near the curtain could hear some expostulatory words behind it, and when it was rolled up again, the King's countenance was held rigidly, in solemnity, though several persons in the gallery did their best to derange it. Miss Van Brounk sustained herself admirably under these trying circumstances.

In the next tableau, Miss Lizzie Thompson was a Roman matron proudly showing her children to a frivolous lady (Miss Thompson's sister), who looked scornfully at the children while she held up a handful of jewelry. Mr. Stokely explained to the spectators that the Roman matron was Cornelia, and that the prettily dressed children were the Gracchi.

In the next tableau Miss Cromwell made a very pretty figure as Julia at the moment in which she recognizes her father in the Hunchback. There were some cries of "Oh!" but Miss Cromwell's features remained unmoved. In another tableau a man in Greek dress had raised himself partly from the floor, and was gazing in horror at a girl shrouded in gauze, who was pointing to a scarlet ribbon which streamed down from her breast. Mr. Stokely explained that this was the dream of Aristomenes, a Greek, who sacrificed his daughter to the gods. The daughter, he said, was pointing to the wound in her breast made by the knife of the priest.

In the seventh and last tableau the characters in all the preceding tableaux appeared, effectively grouped.

A TRIUMPH IN PLACE OF A FUNERAL.

The Columbia Sophomores' May Festival to Assume a New Form.

The sophomore class of Columbia College proposes to substitute this year for the "Burial of the Ancient," forbidden by the faculty, a mock triumph of a Roman General returning to Rome after a victorious campaign. Torchlights, masks, and grotesque costumes are to be as plentiful as in the prohibited burial ceremony. Besides these, a gilded chariot is to convey the stuffed figure of a conqueror and other effigies representing vanquished enemies brought several thousand miles to grace the victor's triumph. On arriving at the college green some stuffed statues are to be ripped open in order that a southsayer may inspect the cotton entrails and pronounce a mock prediction of good luck to the conqueror. A committee of the sophomore class has collected nearly $700 to defray the expenses. The printing and music are already arranged, and the college boys are looking forward to May 26 with more fun than they had in celebrating the Burial of the Ancient.

The "Ancient," now defunct indeed, was a copy of Rogers's "Antiquities," a book with which successive sophomore classes have quarrelled on account of the solidity of the facts which adorn its pages. The poem read at the burial last year, and printed in the Columbiad, was satire of the college faculty of such a character that the edition of the Columbiad was suppressed and future burials were prohibited.

The Wrong Name.

NEWBURGH, April 20.—The correspondent made a slight mistake in the report in THE SUN of Friday last of the suit against Washington Brooker as executor. It was not Mrs. Hinckley's claim that was sued for, but that of Mrs. Mazo, the widow of a resident of this city. Neither has Mrs. Brooker deserted her husband.
