VANDERBILT A WITNESS.

THE ORIGIN OF THE PROJECT OF TELEGRAPH CONSOLIDATION.

What Led to the Meeting for that Purpose with Jay Gould—Mr. Vanderbilt's Holdings Before and After the Bargain of Stock.

There was some surprise among the few persons in the Superior Court room, before Judge Truax, yesterday morning, when Mr. William H. Vanderbilt quietly entered and took the stand as a witness. He was examined by Mr. Robert Sewell, counsel for Mr. William S. Williams in the suit against the telegraph companies. Mr. Vanderbilt testified as follows:

Q.—In January of the year 1881 you were a stockholder of the Western Union Telegraph Company? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—On the 9th of January you had a meeting with Mr. Gould at your house? A.—On Sunday; yes, sir.

Q.—Will you please state whether you had any previous meeting with Mr. Gould to that one? A.—On this business?

Q.—On any business connected with telegraph stock? A.—No, sir; not directly connected with telegraph stock.

Q.—Did you indirectly? A.—I had a number of interviews with Mr. Gould after my return from Europe about Nov. 1, from that time until Jan. 9, and some weeks thereafter, a number of interviews with him in regard to railroad matters, and matters connected with the Wabash road, and on one occasion about two weeks after my return, the subject of telegraphing came up. That is the only time I remember talking with Mr. Gould upon that subject.

Q.—When did you return? A.—I returned the latter part of October.

Q.—Shortly after the question of telegraphing first came up? A.—I should think about the middle of November.

Q.—May I ask what was said on that occasion about telegraph stock? A.—Nothing said about the stock; about the company.

Q.—What was said about the company? A.—I declare I cannot remember; it was a long conversation.

Q.—Did what was said have any effect upon your mind with respect to the value of your holdings in stock in the Western Union Telegraph Company? A.—I had a large amount of stock at that time.

Q.—Did the result of this conversation affect your mind in respect to your judgment of its value? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Did you sell a large amount of stock shortly after the meeting? A.—Yes, sir. Some two or three weeks after that I had a conversation with Mr. Gould. It was a matter concerning the telegraph company.

Q.—I have no desire to pry into what you and Mr. Gould talked about outside of the telegraph company at all, and therefore I only ask you about the telegraph company. A.—All right.

Q.—Whatever was said about the telegraph is what I want to get at. A.—The purport of that conversation was whether something could not be done to adjust the difficulty between these two companies.

Q.—Was that before or after you sold the stock? A.—Before.

Q.—And from that time down to this meeting on the Sunday at your house you had no meeting with Mr. Gould at which the telegraph was alluded to? A.—I do not want you to understand that the result of that conversation was the cause of my selling that stock.

Mr. Sewell—You did not say so. A.—No, sir; but if you want that I will give it to you.

Q.—I should be happy to hear it from you? A.—While I was in Europe I had my usual amount of stock, not a very large amount. I had held it for a long time as an investment. While I was in Europe I heard of an effort being made to get the control of the Western Union Telegraph Company's stock, and I telegraphed to somebody and I bought a large amount more of stock, a larger amount than I would have held under any circumstances, and after my return and my conversation with Mr. Gould I should have sold probably, because the election took place in the latter part of October. I should probably have sold the amount of stock down to my reasonable investment, whether I had a conversation with Mr. Gould or not. That explains that.

Q.—Prior to this conversation on Sunday you had no conversation except this one that you speak of in the middle of November with Mr. Gould on the subject of telegraphing? A.—No, sir.

Q.—At the time you had this conversation on Sunday did you have any considerable amount of telegraph stock left? A.—Oh, yes; yes, sir. I had sold a large amount, but I still had what people would call a large amount.

Q.—Was it a large amount compared with your usual holding of the stock? A.—My usual holding—yes, sir; it is about half what I had when I went to Europe.

Q.—How did you come to write a note to Mr Gould and ask him to come to your house at 9 o'clock that Sunday evening? A.—With the money I got from the proceeds of my stock from the sales of the Western Union, I invested very largely in Western railroads, and among others bought some 40 of Union Pacific stock. Mr. Dillon knew that I was a very large shareholder there and waited upon me, and we talked over Union Pacific matters a number of times, and I think a number of times he came to my house; and a day or two before this, I think, Mr. Dillon came in, and in the course of conversation it turned to the telegraph matters, and, from something he said, it gave me the idea that this was a good time to negotiate the matter. I think on that Sunday morning Mr. Dillon called at my house. I am pretty sure he did, and, after he called, from what he had said, I wrote that note to Mr. Gould.

Q.—Did you make any proposal to Mr. Gould? A.—At the time Mr. Dillon, the President—

Q.—Did you make Mr. Gould any proposition on the understanding of what passed between you on that evening? A.—I cannot say exactly what passed. We had a long talk, and there was not any difference at all between Mr. Gould and myself in our minds about the property. I thought we had better unite and build the Union Pacific of the company, and it was not worth while for me to tell Mr. Gould anything about it, for he knew as much about the Western Union Telegraph as I did.

Q.—Was there not something said in your talking about taking the American Union at ten millions of dollars, and increasing your capital of the Western Union Telegraph Company to seventy millions? A.—No, sir; that was not said with Mr. Gould—at least, it did not make any impression upon me.

Q.—You do not think that you talked figures at all with Mr. Gould? A.—No; I told Mr. Gould there had been a great pressure brought upon me, that I had sold my very large interest, and I told him there was a good deal of uneasiness about it, that the year before the company had one million dollars surplus, and that at that time the surplus was about one and the stockholders were getting very uneasy, and I had a good many people coming and discussing with me about the matter, both in the Board and out, and of course I was anxious that the people should not get the impression that I did not take an interest in the matter now. They supposed that I had less weak than I really had, but they considered me nominally out of it, and if anything could be done for the benefit of the concern, the stockholders or anything of the kind, I was perfectly willing to do it. I did not wish to evade any responsibility, but to evade any full share of anything that could be done. I told Mr. Gould, among other things of the letter I had received from Mr. Hatch, and he said that he had not any controlling interest.

Q.—He said that Mr. Hatch had not a controlling interest? A.—That he had not the control. I asked Mr. Hatch had written. I asked him what was the feeling among his people, whether he thought that the matter could be adjusted between the two companies, and he said that so far as he was concerned he was anxious that it should be. I said to him, "Well," says I, "if you will communicate with my people—the Western Union people—to-night, and to-morrow I will let you hear from me; and if you will put yourself in communication with your people, we will see if we cannot bring about a meeting of the representatives of the company and see if anything can be done." That is about the end of it, and he went away.

Q.—Did Mr. Gould tell you how much Western Union stock he then held? A.—No, sir; he did not say whether he held one share, or how many.

Q.—At the next meeting, what arrangement was made that you and your friends should retire from the directory? A.—None.

Q.—Was there nothing said about that at all? A.—No, sir, nothing was said except what was said by me. I volunteered to say afterward, when they talked about arrangements, that my son-in-law, Mr. Twombly, was a very active member of the Board, and the Vice-President; that I was going to take him away from there anyhow; that I had plenty of work for him to do in my own concerns, and I wanted him to leave, but I did not say a word about leaving, or anything of the kind, for I had no such intention at that time.

Q.—You did afterward? A.—Not until I considered the interests over, and then I left, and I found afterward they were not, or I should not have left until they were.

Q.—Your son resigned? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Your son-in-law resigned? A.—My son-in-law resigned immediately.

Q.—Mr. Barger resigned? A.—Mr. Barger resigned without my knowing it. He sent in his resignation, and I did not know it for three or four days afterward.

Cross examined by Mr. Vanderpoel:

Q.—At the time you had these conversations with Mr. Dillon there was an active rivalry between the interests of the Western Union and the American Union Telegraph companies over the rights of the American Union Telegraph Company along the Union Pacific Railroad? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Then your attention was naturally turned to the subject of the difficulties between the two companies? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—You were one of the directors, and Gov. Morgan and others had brought the subject to your attention? A.—Yes, sir. We had talked it over, and intended to put it in a proper shape to bring before Mr. Dillon for his attention.

Q.—You were awaiting the opportunity? A.—I considered they were giving the American Union favors which the other companies were not receiving, but I did not bring it to his attention.

Q.—When you spoke of the term surplus in your answer, a million dollar surplus in the treasury for the year before, you meant a cash surplus in the treasury? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Over and above the addition to the plant, &c., that had been making? A.—It had been used in the construction and otherwise.

Q.—That million of dollars had been used? A.—It had been used in additions in constructing the line.

Q.—So far as you were concerned was this arrangement made between these companies in entire good faith? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—And in the honest belief upon your part as a director of the company that it was for the best interest of the company? A.—Yes, sir; I would do it over again to-morrow were I in the same situation.

Q.—You did not own any American Union stock, I believe? A.—I did not, sir. I had some Atlantic and Pacific, and had held it for a long time.

Mr. Sewell—That closes the Williams case. We are ready to hand your Honor the papers, excepting our requests to find, which are not yet engrossed.

It was arranged that the findings on both sides should be submitted on Friday morning.

Little Walter Cardwell and his Parents.

A return to Mrs. Ella A. Cardwell's application to Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, for a writ of habeas corpus to regain the custody of her 8-year-old son, Walter F. Cardwell, was made yesterday. Mrs. Cardwell says that in March, 1880, she got a divorce from her husband, Samuel Cardwell, Jr., from Judge D. W. Small, in Waukesha County, Wis., and was awarded the custody of the child, with whom she came to this city to live. On May 18 the boy, while playing in front of her residence, at 31 West Sixteenth street, was invited by a man and woman who drove up in a coach to take a ride, and was carried off to his grandfather's house, 536 Third avenue.

In court yesterday the boy sat between two men across the court room from his mother, who sat alone and was apparently weeping. The return to the writ set forth that the husband had no knowledge of the alleged divorce proceedings, in which the papers were served on him, and that the child is lawfully in his possession.

The case was referred to Clerk Jean F. Dow to take testimony, and meanwhile it was ordered that the mother shall be permitted to see the boy twice a week at his grandfather's house. They were permitted to meet also in a vacant room in the room with the lawyers on both sides present. After the first visit two men took the boy by the arms and marched him off while he looked back over his shoulder at his mother.

Women Accused of Highway Robbery.

Isabel Wiley of 135 Suffolk street and Kate Ward of 12 Ridge street were accused, in the Essex Market Police Court, yesterday, of highway robbery in taking Kate Marr, a child, of 78 Avenue A, into a hallway and robbing her of her earrings. The prisoners were held.

DISCORD IN THE LEVY FAMILY.

The Cornet Player Arrested at the Instance of Mrs. Levy, who Wants a Divorce.

Isaac Levy, the cornet player, was arrested by the Sheriff yesterday on an order granted by Justice Truax of the Superior Court. The complainant is Emily Levy, his wife. She asks that she be divorced from Levy and have the custody of her children, and that Levy be compelled to support her and her children. The complaint alleges that she was married to him on Aug. 29, 1860, in the parish church in the parish of St. George's, Hanover square, Middlesex, England, and that two children are the issue of the marriage. She further alleges that Levy has lived with Marianne Conway and committed adultery with other women.

In her affidavit Mrs. Levy says that on Oct. 31, 1873, a deed of separation was signed by her and Levy in London, by the terms of which Levy agreed to pay her £168 a year in installments, and she promised not to disturb or molest him, or to compel him to live with her. These payments were made to her until November, 1876, but since then she has been paid only £204, although she should have received £770. The affidavit also sets forth that when Levy was asked by John A. Balestier, Emily Levy's lawyer, for money due her he replied that a part of the moneys in arrears became due while he was traveling in Australia and elsewhere, and that as he had made no money on that tour he would not pay what was due. He is credited with having said, further:

"I do not intend to be annoyed by this matter. I have let Mrs. Levy keep the children, and she ought not to trouble me to pay this back money. But I have this to say, that if she does trouble me with our old matters or with any law suits, I will simply leave New York and the United States, and go where she will not trouble me. My profession is such that it does not compel me to remain in New York, and with my talent and reputation I can make a living anywhere; and you can tell Mrs. Levy and her friends that I will pay the allowances under that paper hereafter if I am able to; but if she attempts to force me to pay anything, or brings any suits against me, I will go away where the New York courts cannot reach me, and a judgment against me will not be worth a cent. I have no houses or lands, and what I have I can take with me."

Mr. Levy gave bail in $2,500 and was released.

PRINCETON'S VICTORY.

Beating the Yale Base Ball Team in a Close and Exciting Match.

PRINCETON, June 1.—An exciting and close game of base ball was played on the university grounds by Princeton and Yale to-day. Play was begun with Yale at the bat. She failed to score. For Princeton, Duffield reached first by Ives's bad throw, stole second, and came home, amid cheers, by the ball being too slowly fielded in by Gardner. No other chance of scoring was given in this inning. The second inning opened with Camp at the bat. He was retired by Wadleigh's difficult catch in the left field; but Walden was more fortunate, reaching first by Coney's error, second by Hopkins's sacrifice hit, and then came home by Archer's dropped ball. Another run was added in this inning. Princeton got two men on bases, but neither scored, while her opponents in the third, by heavy batting ran their score up to five. Princeton tallied the sir thrice in the vain endeavor to hit the leather. Hotchkisson opened the fourth with a four-bagger, but they stored no more. Princeton's prospects of victory now began to darken, but she went to the bat with a will, and by bunching hits secured two runs. Neither scored in the fifth and sixth, it being impossible for Princeton to get a ball by Walden. In the seventh Yale's catcher began to show signs of fatigue, and by his passed balls one run was added to their opponents' score. A blank was given to Yale in the eighth, and Princeton came to bat with high hopes. Two men were retired when the giant Harlan seized the bat and struck the leather for a three-bagger, and reached home by Winton's hit to right. The ninth opened with Princeton in the lead. The greatest excitement prevailed, and after the three Yale batters had been retired the enthusiasm of the students became uncontrollable. Hats, caps, and canes were waved in the air and cheer after cheer was sent up. Princeton declined to play the last half of the ninth. Score by innings:

Yale	0 2 3 1 0 0 0 0 0—6
Princeton	1 0 0 2 0 0 2 2 ×—7

Good Play on the Polo Grounds—Unexpected Results in League Games.

In yesterday's ball game at the Polo Grounds the Washington nine had to call upon Nelson of the Atlantics to help them, and the Metropolitans borrowed Hayes of the same club, after having borrowed Pike the day before. The play, however, in spite of the lax management thus indicated, was interesting, both nines doing some very pretty fielding. The Metropolitans opened play with a scratch run in the first inning, after which nothing was made by either side until the seventh inning, when the Metropolitans got in two more runs, chiefly by errors. Then the visitors spurted at the bat, earned two more, and scored five. In their turn, during the Metropolitans earned two runs and scored three. The last inning was blank on both sides. The Washington players showed much lack of discipline, and at times wanted over the decisions of the umpire. The score was:

First base by errors—Metropolitan, 5; Washington, 3. Runs earned—Metropolitan, 2; Washington, 2.

In the League games yesterday there were two unexpected results. One was the defeat of the Chicago nine—their second defeat—by the Troys at Troy, by 5 to 4, after a game of eleven innings, and the other was the total crushing of the Clevelands over the Bostons at Boston, with a score of 7 to 1. The Worcesters, too, were taken into camp on their own grounds by the Wolverines of Detroit, by 10 to 8. At Providence the Buffalos were defeated by the home team by 7 to 5.

The Rose Hill nine of St. John's College, N. Y., visited Easton, Pa., yesterday, and defeated the Lafayette College nine by 13 to 7.

Leary, who replaces Will White as pitcher for the Detroit nine, will not be allowed to play in future, on account of his indebtedness to the Metropolitan management.

Morrissey, third baseman of the Buffalo Club, is on the sick list. It is thought that he will not play again this season.
