MRS. MORDAUNT ANGRY.

A Lively Tilt between the Actress and a Lawyer in Brooklyn.

Police Commissioner James Jourdan yesterday gave a further hearing to the charges made by Police Captain Riley against Sergeant James Campbell, growing out of Campbell's arrest on a charge of throwing red pepper into the eyes of Mrs. Fanny Mordaunt, the wife of Frank Mordaunt, the actor. The charge considered yesterday was that Sergeant Campbell had called at Mrs. Mordaunt's residence and revealed private police information, and had spoken disrespectfully of Mrs. Mordaunt and her husband.

Mr. Frank Mordaunt, who at the last hearing had a tilt with Lawyer Ridgeway, who spoke of him as a "Bowery actor who clutched bloody daggers," addressing the Commissioners yesterday, said that he had been grossly insulted, and that he did not wish to be obliged to take the law into his own hands to defend his family from such insults in court. The dignity of the Court ought to be sufficient to stop them.

Capt. Riley testified that Mrs. Mordaunt told him that she was well informed upon what occurred in the police station, as Sergeant Campbell discussed police business in her house, and freely discussed the character of his superior officers. Sergt. Campbell had spoken of Mrs. Mordaunt as dangerous, and said that her husband was no better. Upon cross-examination Capt. Riley said that the Sergeant once informed him that Mrs. Mordaunt's house was worse than a disorderly house.

"Did you ever hear of a man named Straiton, a cigar dealer, being robbed there?" asked Lawyer Ridgeway.

Mrs. Mordaunt, who, richly dressed, was seated by her husband, on hearing this question exclaimed: "You had better bring Mr. Straiton here; he is easily found."

The Captain said that he had not heard of such a robbery, nor had he heard that Sergeant Masterson had taken Mrs. Mordaunt home, or that she had made a scene at a wine party at Paul Bauer's.

Detective Donlon testified that, acting under Capt. Riley's orders, he had had Mrs. Mordaunt's house under surveillance since March, but he had seen nothing suspicious.

Frank Mordaunt, the actor, testified that his true name was Markham, and that Mordaunt was his professional name. Sergeant Campbell, he said, was in his house after midnight, one night after his arrest on a charge of throwing the pepper, and appealed to him to drop the whole matter. One night, when Mr. Mordaunt lived in Nostrand avenue, Campbell came there and stayed nearly all night. He went out once, saying that he would have to go and look where the officers were, and he would be back again. Campbell drank whiskey there, and he also told where the witness could get whiskey on Sunday. Sergeant Campbell sometimes went out by the front way and sometimes over the back fence. "Whatever is done in my house," said Mr. Mordaunt, "is done entirely with my sanction. If any improper characters come there I am liable to know it."

Mrs. Mordaunt testified that Sergeant Campbell one night put on her husband's clothes and went out to get whiskey. He persuaded her once to go to the police station and report that her dog was lost that he might have an excuse to visit her house. He told her that detectives were watching her house.

Mr. Ridgeway asked her if one night when intoxicated she did not take hold of a woman in the street and tear her clothes off. "I never was intoxicated," said Mrs. Mordaunt. The question was objected to, and Mr. Ridgeway said that he wished to show the true character of the woman who had been working against the witness and husband.

"Me a thief!" exclaimed Mrs. Mordaunt, rising from her chair. "Me a bad woman!"

"That is what we intend to prove," said Mr. Ridgeway.

"Why," Mrs. Mordaunt said in a loud voice, shaking her fan in Mr. Ridgeway's face, "why, if you stood before the tribunal of God himself and charged me with being a bad woman, I would blow your brains out."

Then leaving the witness chair, Mrs. Mordaunt said that she did not intend to be insulted any more.

Police Commissioner Jourdan reserved his decision.

BLUE LAW IN PATERSON.

The Liquor Dealers Preparing to Strike at their Enemies on Sunday.

Mayor Gillmor and the Paterson police have been making special efforts of late to enforce the Sunday law, which requires the closing of liquor saloons. Several complaints have been made, and the movement has been prosecuted with such energy that it resulted yesterday afternoon in a mass meeting of the liquor dealers of the city. There were over 300 saloon keepers present. Mr. Michael Brown presided. Mr. Z. M. Ward, the counsel engaged, explained the principles of the State Sunday law, better known as the "New Jersey Blue Law," which imposes a fine for the doing of any work on Sunday. It is the same State law that prohibits the sale of liquor on Sunday. It prohibits the keeping open on Sunday of drug stores, confectioneries, cigar stores, or other business places, stops the running of milk wagons, the sale of papers in the streets, the running of horse and steam cars, the hiring of carriages from livery stables, or the travelling in the streets of any one not going to or from church. Mr. Ward also informed the liquor dealers that it was against the law for any one to visit tippling houses on Sunday for any purpose whatever, and consequently that Mr. W. H. Bartram, the temperance agitator, who caused a sensation at the Falls last Sunday, the Rev. Mr. Hector, who accompanied him, and Justice Benjamin Doremus, who also took part in that movement, and visited the village of Cliff to make complaints, were liable to prosecution.

The meeting resolved unanimously to close every saloon in Paterson next Sunday, and resolved itself into a committee of the whole to spend Sunday in watching those who were violating the law in any manner. The Executive Committee will hold a continuous session all day Sunday at its rooms in Harmony Hall, Main street, for the purpose of hearing the complaints and taking the names of the witnesses. Complaints will be made against all milkmen, cigar store keepers, drug store proprietors, livery stable keepers, news dealers and agents, horse car drivers, railroad train engineers, and all others who do any work on Sunday within the limits of the city. The meeting also resolved itself into a committee to watch Messrs. Bartram, Doremus, and Hector to see if they visited any saloons.

One of the men present wanted to except the milkmen, as there were many mothers with infants who were dependent on the supply of milk. But it was decided that the infants should obey the law as well as grown folks, and the proposition to make an exception in their favor was voted down.

The liquor dealers hope by this means to make the law so obnoxious that the attempt to enforce it against them will be abandoned.

Automatic Telephone Connection.

Messrs. Connelly and McTighe of Philadelphia have patented an invention which is intended to do away with the necessity of operators to make telephone connections in the main office. One of the officers of the Bell Telephone Company recently went to Philadelphia to see the invention. The model exhibited consisted of a dial marked with twenty-five numbers, representing different connections. A pointer, moved by clock work, passed over the dial, and, by means of a plug, was stopped at any number wished. Electric circuit was made and broken as each number was reached and passed, and a relay at the main office worked a system of cogs and wheels there, and gave telephonic connections corresponding to those indicated on the dial. The pointer, being stopped by the plug at any particular number on the dial, kept connection open with the branch indicated by that number as long as the plug remained. The model worked successfully. For the 3,000 connections of the telephone in this city the inventor thinks he could arrange a plate of 3,000 numbers, moved by steam, with points or cogs to represent each a connection. The purchase of this invention is under consideration by the Bell Company. If it is bought it is not probable that more than $10,000 will be given for it.

The Prize Essay on Suicide.

The essay which won the prize of $100 offered by Dr. Skene of the Alumni of the Long Island College Hospital was written by Dr. Albert J. Leffingwell of the class of 1874 on the topic, "Suicides in American Societies." Dr. Armour said yesterday that it was one of the ablest productions ever written upon the subject of suicide, and, by its statistics, most patiently gathered, it refuted much of what was now accepted as the standard literature upon the subject. Dr. Leffingwell, who made medicine a study chiefly as an accomplishment, is to sail on saturday from San Francisco for Yokohama, on a tour around the world. Enclosed in an envelope containing his name was a note requesting the committee to hold his paper until his return, as he expected to incorporate it in a book. The essay is, however, the property of the Alumni Association, and it will probably be published in one of the scientific monthlies.

Commodore Nutt's Estate.

Mrs. Lillian Nutt applied for letters of administration yesterday on the estate of her late husband, Commodore Nutt. The Surrogate rejected the application because Mrs. Nutt is a minor. Mrs. Nutt thereupon asked that Dewitt C. Purdy be appointed her guardian.

WATCHING THE ECLIPSE.

The Account that a Man Accused of Abduction Gave of his Whereabouts.

RED BANK, June 15.—On Sunday afternoon Mrs. George Mount appeared before Justice Wm. Child of this place and swore out a warrant for the arrest of Thomas Applegate, a farm hand employed by Wm. V. Conover of Middletown, on a charge of abducting her daughter Sarah. Early on Monday morning Constable Frank Patterson visited Conover's farm, and found Applegate asleep in bed. He arrested him and brought him to this place. In the evening a preliminary hearing was given him. The hearing took place before Justice Child, who is seventy-five years old. A number of witnesses were sworn, and from them the following particulars were elicited:

About election time last fall Sarah Mount, who was not then fourteen years of age, became acquainted with a number of young men, and through them made the acquaintance of Applegate. The latter seemed pleased with the girl, and made every effort to get into her company, although her mother did all in her power to keep them apart. On Saturday last Applegate came to the house and saw the girl. In the afternoon they went off together, and at night the girl did not return. Her parents anxiously awaited her coming all that night, but she did not arrive, and when, on Sunday, she did not make her appearance they appealed to the Justice as above related.

Applegate testified that on Saturday he met the girl, and toward evening they went out for a walk. They walked along the river bank and finally sat down. As the eclipse of the moon was to occur that night, they decided to wait and see it. They remained on the bank of the Shrewsbury until they had seen the eclipse, and then he escorted the girl back to the house and went home himself. He thought no more of the affair until Monday morning, when he was arrested on the charge of abduction. Applegate and his friends claim that the arrest is a conspiracy, and that the parents of the girl have her in hiding, and will keep her so until he either agrees to pay them money or consents to marry the girl.

The prisoner was released, and a further examination will be held as soon as more evidence can be produced. The prosecution, it is said, has secured a large num ber of witnesses for the next examination.

Burglars in Elizabeth.

The dry goods store of H. C. Williams in Elizabeth was robbed by burglars early yesterday morning. The store is in Kean's iron building, on Broad street, a few rods from the railroad station, and from its situation on the well-lighted and busy thoroughfare was regarded as safe from the attacks of thieves. The burglars, it is supposed, went to the place in a carriage drawn by two horses, as such a vehicle was seen standing for some time at Jersey and Broad streets, a short distance from the store. The team was driven down an alley to the rear of the store, and there hitched while the thieves made their way through a high board fence and pried out a bar of an iron grating in a basement window, and raised the sash sufficiently to allow one of their number to enter. From the smallness of the aperture it is supposed that a boy was employed for this purpose. Once inside, the men worked unmolested. They carefully removed the wrappers from packages of silks, and left them behind them, so as to prevent identification of the goods. One hundred pieces of silk, a case of parasols, a case of kid gloves, and other goods to the value of $4,000 or $5,000 were taken. The men were seen at their work by Mrs. Wade, who has apartments in the store across the alley. She says it was about 4 o'clock. After the carriage was driven off she gave the alarm, but no trace was found of the robbers. Policemen also saw the carriage going through Jersey street, but did not attempt to stop it. A man who was probably a scout for the thieves was seen on Broad street by a policeman. He said he wanted to take the owl train for New York. The policeman piloted him to the depot. The man did not wait for the owl train, but hopped on to a freight train going in the opposite direction, and jumped off again at North Elizabeth.

Absent Adamski.

Policeman Adamski of the Delancey street station was charged in the hearing before Commissioner Matthews yesterday with having been absent five days without leave, the penalty for which is dismissal from the force. Adamski was not present to answer for himself, and the fact of his absence was testified to by other policemen. Adamski is supposed to have eloped with the wife of Moses Naussbaum of 277 Monroe street.

Owners of Coastwise Craft Rejoicing.

A number of merchants and ship owners met at the Maritime Exchange yesterday and adopted resolutions of thanks to the Legislature for abolishing compulsory Hell Gate pilotage. It was stated that the new law which went into effect yesterday will save $125,000 a year to the coast trade, and all vessels benefited are recommended to commemorate its passage by a display of their flags next Wednesday.

Hurt by a Falling Column.

An iron column that was in course of erection in the Astor building at Broadway and Prince street, yesterday broke through the wooden slide along which it was being slowly pushed, and the entire structure fell apart, burying several workmen in the ruins. Nicholas Denongvile of 506 West Forty-seventh street was partly scalped, and John Grey of 197 Avenue A had one of his toes crushed.

A Farewell Reception to M. Brenil.

On Saturday night a reception will be given at the house of M. Marc Gambrier, 14 West Fourteenth street, to M. Edmond Brenil, who for many years has been Consul-General of France at New York, and who is about to sail for France. A gold-mounted casket containing detached pages on which are the autographs of his friends will be presented to M. Brenil as a souvenir.
