A PECULIAR BURGLARY INDEED.

The Rev. Benjamin F. Shuart Tackles a Crackerman and is Hurt.

From the Minneapolis Tribune.

Probably the most peculiar burglary in the criminal history of this country occurred shortly before midnight Friday in the peaceful home of Benjamin F. Shuart, assistant pastor of Plymouth Church, on the bluff west of Thomas Lowry's residence. Mr. Shuart was sleeping in a room on the east side of the house, and at 11:30 o'clock was awakened by a crash of glass in the dining room, and was further startled by hearing a volley of oaths of the most shocking character. At first he imagined some drunken man had entered the house, and so informed his startled wife; but this theory was soon dispelled when a swaggering form entered from the dining room, and a strange voice yelled out, "I'm a burglar and I want money."

By this time the position of the intruder was defined, and the peaceful clergyman picked up a heavy, old-fashioned chair and banged away at the burglar with good effect. The two men clinched, and then followed a hand-to-hand combat. Around the room, hugging the wall, went the two men, and at last settled near a window in the sitting room, when Mr. Shuart called to his wife for help. She grasped a five-pound Indian club and made for the combatants, dealing two heavy blows, but unfortunately they fell on the head of the preacher instead of that of the burglar, and she was compelled to desist. All was dark as pitch, and the uneven battle continued.

Finally the burglar got the preacher in a corner, and kept banging away with a pair of brass knuckles until the preacher was forced to ask for quarter. The burglar then let up on his victim, pulled a match, and made a light in the student's lamp on the table in the sitting room, and proceeded to ransack things. Meanwhile Mrs. Shuart went out in the yard and vainly called for help. At this moment the hired girl came down stairs, and the burglar, unsuccessful in his hunt for booty, started to leave the house, going off with muttered curses. Twice during the hunt for valuables the burglar's back was turned, and Mr. Shuart, armed with a small pocket knife, was about to use it, but didn't. And so the burglar departed unmolested, and without anything to show for his exploit save a bloody head. Mr. Shuart tore off the burglar's mask during the struggle, and is positive he can recognize the man again.

A Tribune reporter called at the house yesterday, and a sight met his eyes never to be forgotten. On three sides of the sitting room the walls and doors and the floor were spattered thickly with blood, showing plainly that a terrible struggle must have taken place. Mr. Shuart is badly hurt about the head, his left eye is cut terribly, and he presents a sorry appearance indeed. He says the burglar evinced no fear, and from the start was noisy and careless. It will be several weeks before the reverend gentleman will be presentable for pulpit duty. Mrs. Shuart is suffering from nervousness and a kick received from the burglar on her left side. Could he be found to-day that burglar would no doubt be free to confess his surprise at the warm reception he received from a messenger of peace.

Death of One of the Men who Blew Up the Rebel Ram Albemarle.

PHILADELPHIA, July 6.—Richard Hamilton, who was one of the fourteen men who succeeded in blowing up the rebel ram Albemarle on the night of Oct. 27, 1864, while it was lying at Plymouth, North Carolina, died this morning of paralysis at his residence, 260 Liberty street, Camden. Mr. Hamilton was born in Southwark, this city, about forty-six years ago. He enlisted in the navy in the early part of the rebellion and remained in it until the close of the war. On the night in question Lieut. Cushing, accompanied by thirteen volunteers, including Hamilton, put off in a torpedo boat to blow up the Albemarle. Darkness enabled the men to approach the ram unperceived. Their own boat, however, was blown up by the explosion, and those of the crew who were not killed or drowned were captured by the Confederates. Among them was Hamilton. When released from captivity his health was so bad that he was forced to spend many a weary month in the hospital. He has lived in Camden since the close of the war. Two years ago he was stricken with paralysis, and last night a second shock ended his career.

He Thought he Might as Well Plead Guilty.

John Evans was arraigned in the Hudson County Court of General Sessions yesterday on a charge of stealing a ship's cable. He pleaded guilty.

"What did you do with the chain?" Judge Garretson asked.

"I didn't have it at all," answered the prisoner.

"What do you mean by that?" asked the Judge.

"I mean that I didn't take it. I was rowing in a boat alongside of a ship and the captain called me on board, and accused me of trying to steal his chain, and had me arrested."

"If you didn't take it, why did you plead guilty?"

"Well, I thought I would be found guilty, anyhow, and I wanted to be sentenced as soon as possible."

The Judge refused to accept the plea, and Evans was remanded for trial.

A Sentence Promptly Commuted.

BALTIMORE, July 8.—Col. Geo. S. Marsh, convicted in Annapolis on May 3 of having set fire to his house in Anne Arundel County, was sentenced to-day to three years in the penitentiary. The Governor immediately commuted the sentence to one year in jail, the two months he has already served in jail to be deducted from that time. Col. Marsh is an aged man, and always had the confidence and respect of those who knew him. He was for a time connected with the management of the Annapolis and Elk Ridge Railroad, and has lived in Anne Arundel for more than twenty years.

A Balcony Scene of Randall's Island.

Three young men, John O'Donnell, Hugh Costello, and John Mcgill, rowed up the East River Sunday afternoon in a boat hired at the Battery and reached Randall's Island just after dusk. They approached the female prison unnoticed, and, selecting three of the inmates to go back to the city with them, when Keeper Files and a watchman discovered them, and made them prisoners. At the Harlem Police Court the young men were remanded for examination.

Witnesses in a Murder Trial Spirited Away.

CHICAGO, July 8.—The trial of James Tobin, for kicking his daughter to death, came to a sudden end to-day, during argument on the admissibility of the testimony taken before the Coroner's jury, on the ground that the chief witnesses for the prosecution had been "spirited away" to Canada. Three of the jurors were also protected by the Bailiffs. With the agreement of counsel on both sides, the jury was discharged, and Tobin remanded, pending a second trial.
