LAND SLIDES IN SWITZERLAND.

The Terrible Disaster at Elm—150 Persons Buried—The Destruction of the Town of Flims—Over 2400 Persons Killed—The Rossberg Mountain Slide.

GENEVA, Sept. 16.—The public mind has been grievously moved by the news of the catastrophe at Elm, an Alpine village in the canton of Glaris, about fifteen miles from the chief town of the canton. Slate is brought in large quantities from the small and wild valley in which the village is situated. The industry which made the inhabitants prosperous has at last proved their ruin. It is now known that the basis of the mountain which gave way was layers of slate and schist. The water from the recent exceptional rains had permeated the soil, and caused the layers to slide forward till their specific gravity brought them down into the valley. It is not the first time that such land slips have happened, and, curious enough, they have always occurred in September.

On the 4th of September, 1618, the rich though small town of Flurs, in the Grisons (near the Engadine valley), was entirely buried by a land slip. Over 2,400 persons lost their lives. The site is now occupied by a fine forest of chestnut trees. No remains of the town have ever come to light, with the exception of a bell which belonged to the church, and which turned up twenty years ago.

On the 2d of September, 1806, the Rossberg, a mountain some miles to the north of the Righi, gaveway on its eastern side, and slid down into the lake of Lowerz, which is half filled up, converting the once picturesque slope, studded with chalets, pasturages, and herds of cattle, into a chaotic mass of mud and rock. One hundred and eleven houses and 457 persons were overwhelmed and seen no more.

On the 11th inst. the catastrophe of Elm occurred. It was toward evening. From the account given by a spectator of the event I gather the following particulars: The higher parts of the mountain were seen to quiver like a reed, and the forest to undulate like a field of wheat. All at once down came the rocks and trees flying through the air with the utmost rapidity, and driving the atmosphere before them with such extraordinary pressure that the largest trees, houses, and men in the open fields were carried away like straw. The extreme pressure of the air is not a very surprising fact. Last year, for instance, a forest was shown me where the trees were snapped asunder near the glacier of Diablerets, and I was informed that they were destroyed in a few minutes by a blast of air driven by an avalanche which had fallen down the glacier opposite the forest two miles away.

The Mayor of the district of Elm is ascertaining the number of victims. The list is not complete. It gives the names of 111 persons, belonging to sixty-seven families of the valley, as having disappeared. It is known that there are more victims, many of them Italian workmen occupied in the quarries, and that the total number will be about 150.

Fifteen bodies have been found, but so disfigured as not to be recognized. It is not probable that many others will be withdrawn from their present graves. The fifteen were deposited in the church at the upper end of the village, which miraculously escaped the general destruction. At the funeral service over the fifteen graves the Rev. W. Mohr, pastor of the village, preached, taking as his text: "The mountains shall depart away, and the hills shall down, but My love remaineth forever with thee."

During this ceremony the thunder mingled its voice with the noise of the rocks that continually came crashing down into the valley. From this you see the land slip continues. The authorities have ordered the inhabitants of the remaining houses of Elm to remove elsewhere, at least for the winter.

In a new house near the roadside when the land slip took place there was a christening, at which fifteen persons were present. All perished with the exception of the father, who is now absolutely alone in the world.

Faithful to our motto, "One for all, and all for one," committees are now being formed all over Switzerland to collect relief funds in aid of the afflicted survivors. The latter have not only lost their friends, flocks, and houses, but also have lost, by the destruction of the slate quarries, the source of their former prosperity. Their industry furnished slate not only for Switzerland, but also for the neighboring foreign countries. To reestablish their works would cost very large sums of money.

J. & C. Johnston's Opening.

A centre of fashionable women's interest yesterday was at Broadway, Fifth avenue, and Twenty-second street, where Messrs. J. & C. Johnston had a fall opening of French costumes, millinery, shawls, and furs. The crowd was dense, particularly in the middle of the afternoon. The exhibits in costumes and millinery were a realization of all that the French designers have lately conceived, not only in the multitudinous shades of the garments and their cut, but even more delicate in the rich taste displayed in the trimmings. Lace, beads, and velvet are most commonly and laboriously combined for this purpose. In apparel for cool weather, when it comes the most attractive things shown were trimmed cloaks the outer material being the decorated fabrics in silk, plush, and satin, which have grown more wonderful in elaborate design from year to year. Chinchilla shawls and seal skin sacques, though less novel, were an important feature of the exhibition, but the eyes of the visitor were opened wide at the imported Parisian bonnets which were unsurpassed in beauty and elegance.
