NOTES FROM THE FARMERS' CLUB.

Questions of Weather and Temperance Handled with Humor and Wisdom.

The Farmers' Club was very versatile at its regular meeting in Cooper Union on Tuesday. The minutes having been read, the Chair announced the death of a prominent member, and asked Farmer Lawrence to say a few words. Farmer Lawrence, a retired importing merchant, said that the departed member was honest and benevolent, and that by so being he was simply observant of his duty and deserved no especial commendation. The less said about a dead man, Farmer Lawrence remarked, the better. Human words could not affect the status or influence the rewards of those who had passed beyond the boundaries of mortality.

The Chair read a letter from Mr. Devoe, wherein that prophet foretold the weather for the month of November.

Farmer Lawrence said that for the club to pay attention to the comments of ignorance upon the weather was, in his opinion, a dead waste of time.

Upon this Mr. Devoe, who was present, stepped upon the platform and modestly remarked that he considered his prophecies extremely accurate. "When I said that the 12th of October would be filled with sunshine," Mr. Devoe continued, "I failed to see a storm there was in Michigan, and which advanced a great deal faster than I thought it would. That's why I got left."

"You don't know anything about the weather," said Farmer Thomas.

The Chair inquired of Mr. Devoe whether he considered himself human or divine.

Mr. Devoe said that he thought it no more than just that he should receive the strictures of the gentlemen. As for his making mistakes about the weather, he considered that quite natural. Nothing was more fickle, more full of surprises, than the weather, and the man that was bold enough to tackle the weather would find that he had his hands full.

Dr. Heath read his report upon the testing of the great combination swivel plough from Vermont at the Poet Cutter's place on Oct. 27. Incorporated in this report was THE SUN'S account, published on Sunday, of that notable and delightful transaction. Dr. Heath's report bore testimony to the Poet's great hospitality displayed in behalf of the club, and returned especial thanks for a bottle of "old antique whiskey" with which, just before dinner, Mr. Cutter coyly and as if by accident brought his visitors face to face. This bottle—reference to which was, from motives of delicacy, omitted in THE SUN'S account, but from which the veil of secrecy is now lifted by the bold though, without doubt, kindly hand of Dr. Heath—stood upon the dresser of the Poet, in his bedroom, with a corkscrew ready set in the cork, and was remarkably good. Dr. Heath's account of it was heard with great interest by the club, and at the conclusion of the report Mr. Cutter, who, during its reading had sat covered with blushes in a front seat, moving his Blucher boots about nervously, and exclaiming "Pish!" at intervals, was called upon to recite some of those rippling temperance poems which have lifted him into warranted prominence. Mr. Cutter mounted the platform, and posing himself in graceful angles, recited without effort or affectation 100 lines upon "An Old Black Hat Given by me to my Man Sam," which would be repeated here had it been possible to catch them with anything like just accuracy. The idea was that Sam was a drunkard, but that he was reformed by the gift of the hat and enlisted in the army, where he was speedily killed. The poem was greeted with immense applause; and it is no more than just to say of the Poet that he took no share of the bottle which his great hospitality prompted him to supply for the delectation of his friends.

The paper of the day was then read. It was upon the culture of light wines, and recommended their general introduction in America. It said that the true antidote against drunkenness would be to have a cask of light wine in every cellar. The paper was by a man who once responded in the interest of temperance. One member, whoWore a heavy woollen muffler, and who was so deaf that he caught the sense of the paper only by the assistance of his scooped hand, said: "Woe betide that family that has a wine cask in the cellar! Before you know it a son, or it may be a daughter, will get red about the eyes, and then there will be slats missing from the chicken coop, and the carriage will break down on a dark night. That cask of wine is the very devil."

The Chair said that it thought the muffled member would have better luck if he would drink moderately of light wine, and the club shortly adjourned, several of the members retiring to the executive room to try certain samples furnished by the gentlemen who read the papers of the day.

Brave Fireman Flood.

John P. Flood, late assistant foreman of Hook and Ladder 8 in North Moore street, who died on Tuesday after a short official life, had a remarkable record for bravery. He was 31 years old, and was appointed a fireman in 1872. While on Hook and Ladder 3 he rescued two women from the third story of 507 East Sixteenth street, and his name was placed on the roll of honor. Soon afterward he saved a woman's life at a fire in East Thirteenth street.

On May 2, 1878, he risked his life at a fire at 28 East Fourteenth street. The fire was in the upper stories, and a woman was seen hanging from a fourth-story window. The fourth-tier ladder was too short, and it was placed on the top step near the doorway. Fireman Flood mounted to the top of the ladder and so injured his left foot that he barely had strength to descend. He persisted in helping to hold the ladder, however, and Capt. Meagher mounted the ladder and saved the woman's life. For this a Bennett medal was presented to Capt. Meagher.

Assistant Foreman Flood was retired on May 1, 1881, on half pay. He refused to leave the ranks until compelled, and his comrades say that he was the most enthusiastic fireman they ever knew. The funeral is to take place to-morrow.

Death of Benj. Franklin's Great-Grandson.

Dr. Benjamin Franklin Bache, a great-grandson of Benjamin Franklin, and for nearly sixty years an officer of the United States Navy, died yesterday morning at 283 Henry street, Brooklyn, after an illness of two weeks. He was born in Monticello, Va., on Feb. 7, 1801. His grandmother was Benjamin Franklin's only daughter Sarah, who married Richard Bache, a Philadelphia merchant, who was afterward Postmaster-General. His grandmother superintended the labors of over 2,200 women who were preparing clothing for the Revolutionary soldiers. Dr. Bache was educated at Princeton and at the University of Pennsylvania. He entered the navy as Assistant Surgeon in 1826, and remained there until 1871, when he was appointed Medical Director with the rank of Commodore. His efforts during the war in fighting contractors who were furnishing supplies of drugs that were poor in quality and deficient in weight saved the Government a great deal of money. Dr. Bache leaves a widow and three married daughters. He will be buried from his late residence this afternoon. One of the coast survey steamers bears Dr. Bache's name.

Rivalling Levy with a Tin Whistle.

A contest has been begun in the Kings County Surrogate's office of the will of John McCready, an old bachelor, of 189 Front street, Brooklyn, who died early in July last. He was prostrated by the heat, and, while he was a patient in the Long Island College Hospital, he jumped out of the window and suffered injuries that resulted in his death. He left a will bequeathing all of his property, amounting to $40,000, to his nephew, William McCready. His brother contests the will on the ground that the testator was insane when he executed the will. Testimony was taken by the Surrogate yesterday to show that the testator went to Coney Island, purchased a penny whistle, and went around blowing it, saying that he was a leader of Gilmore's Band, and a rival of Levy. He put a cupidor on his head, and said that it was the new style of hat. The case was not concluded.

Diphtheria in Brooklyn.

Diphtheria threatens to be as serious an epidemic in Brooklyn this winter as last, in spite of all the precautions of the Board of Health. The elaborate machinery of the Board in dealing with this contagious disease has been in operation for a year, but during all that time diphtheria has continued epidemic. Of the 289 cases of death in Brooklyn last week 27 were caused by diphtheria. The present plan of reporting the cases to district inspectors does not keep the health office fully informed of the number of cases in the city. The actual number of cases is not known until the inspectors send in their reports, which they do not do until after they have investigated the cases.

A Missing Tugboat.

Capt. Henry J. Denyse of Tompkinsville is looking for the tugboat Mary J. Finn, of which he is the commander, and which has been missing since Friday night last. Capt. Denyse says that he moored the boat at about 10½ o'clock that night at Pier 14, East River. Leaving the engineer, Putman, and three of the crew aboard, he went to the office to receive his orders. When he returned the boat had disappeared. The tug is owned by Neice & Levey of Philadelphia. She had been towing about the harbor and along all the Coast. Captain's personal effects are aboard the boat. The tug is valued at $15,000. Engineer Putman lives in Tottenville. He has not been home since the tug disappeared.

Accident to the Orange County Express.

The Orange County express, which left New York by the Erie Railroad at 4½ o'clock yesterday afternoon, broke a section of a wheel under the postal car at a switch just before reaching the bridge over the Passaic, and ran to Hawthorne before it could be stopped. There was much alarm among the passengers, but nobody was hurt. The engineer reversed his engine and chained the broken wheel, so as to haul the disabled car to the switch. A delay of half an hour was caused. It was a most narrow escape.

Looking for a Spirit Husband.

Mrs. Maggie Moran of 140 Henry street, Brooklyn, called upon Police Superintendent Campbell yesterday and asked his aid in finding her husband, to whom, she said, she was married five years ago in spirit form in St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church. The Superintendent, finding that his visitor was of unsound mind, humored her for a while and then dismissed her.

Curiosities Gone to Sea.

The steamer Queen numbered among her passengers yesterday Capt. Costentenus, the tattooed Greek, the Leopard Boy, and Zazel of Bunnell's Museum; and G. A. Farini and J. R. Davis of the Bachelor & Doris Circus. The curiosities are booked for the Royal Aquarium, London.

A CONVERSATION INTERRUPTED.

The Wrong Man Shot and a Burglar Makes his Escape Without Getting Hurt.

A young couple sat in the back parlor of Mr. J. G. Smith's house at 415 West Seventy-third street about 1 A. M. yesterday. One of the couple was a young gentleman and the other a young lady. There had been a social gathering in the house, and they were discussing the events of the evening. While thus engaged they heard a noise at the back parlor window. Then a stout masculine hand appeared, evidently belonging to a man outside who was trying to get in. Conversation was temporarily suspended. The young gentleman seized a poker, an implement hitherto of more ornament than use in the house, and gave the hand of the intruder a sharp rap. Then the hand was withdrawn suddenly, and its owner was heard retreating from the yard. Upon looking out of the window the young gentleman saw a ladder placed against the building and another against the yard fence leading to open lots in the rear. He went to the front door and called Private Watchman Matthew Kelly, who was in the vicinity. It was supposed that the man had decamped by the ladders through the open lots.

Kelly went in search of the policeman on the post, and tried to prevail upon him to go with him to examine the back lots. The policeman refused, and Kelly determined to go alone. His story is that he went down the lots behind the houses and found a man who he believes was the burglar crouching in the shadow. He immediately ran after him, and the burglar fled. Kelly followed in quick pursuit, and got so close that the burglar dropped his overcoat and pistol and escaped. Kelly says he was running to summon the police, when he was suddenly confronted by Policeman Hermann Wagner of the 100th street station, who, without warning, shot him in the side. The next moment Wagner recognized him. Fortunately Wagner's aim was defective, and the ball only made a slight wound in Kelly's right side, lodging near the skin. It was extracted easily, and Kelly was walking about yesterday congratulating himself on his escape.

Wagner's story is that he was patrolling his beat on the Boulevard, near Seventy-sixth street, when he heard shots fired. He ran down to Seventy-third street and saw Kelly running with the overcoat on his arm and a pistol in his hand. As the night was dark he did not recognize Kelly, whom he knew well, but supposed he was a fugitive from justice. Wagner is positive that he called to Kelly to stop before shooting, and that he waited until Kelly was within eight feet of him before he fired. He is positive that he called for Kelly to stop in a sufficiently loud tone to be heard, and says that under like circumstances he should shoot again. Kelly said yesterday that he was on good terms with the police, and did not blame the policeman for shooting.

Lillian Hackett and her Sister.

Lillian, the eldest daughter of Michael Hackett, who is on trial in the General Sessions for wife murder, was a witness for her father yesterday. On Tuesday her youngest sister, Florence, 11 years old, had been a witness for the prosecution, and had testified to seeing her father shoot her mother. Lilian is 14. She was called to impeach her sister's credibility. She testified that Florence had told her, on the morning after the shooting, that she was frightened when she saw her father approaching the stoop, where her mother sat, and ran away. So many persons had talked to her about the case, Florence added, that the circumstances of the shooting were confused in her memory. Several witnesses to Hackett's good character and his wife's violent temper were called. The trial was not ended.

Receiver Number Three.

Judge Westbrook removed John A. Rice, receiver of the Rockaway Beach Hotel, and appointed Major Gen. James W. Husted in his stead. The General Term reinstated Mr. Rice. On affidavit of counsel for Henry V. Attrill, plaintiff in the suit against the Rockaway Beach Improvement Company, to which is appended a resignation of Mr. Rice as the receivership, Judge Donohue yesterday entered an order to the defendants to show cause why he should not be removed, and aprointed Aaron A. De Graw temporary receiver.
