JUST AS HIS SUCCESS CAME.

The Story of the Lad who Printed the Calicoon Recorder on a Press Made from a Maple Log and an Old Tombstone.

William T. Morgans died of pneumonia at Middletown on April 14. He was a Sullivan County boy, born in Bethel only 38 years ago. When he was a youngster of 10 he made himself a printing press, supplied with worn out type from the office of the Monticello Watchman, now ex-Congressman Beebe's paper. An old Frenchman of the neighborhood, who had worked at setting the Greek type in Worcester's Dictionary, gave him lessons in type setting.

But, as far as the observations of Morgans, Sr., went, country editors were not making any money. He recognized the boy's ingenuity, and sent him to Henry Deutsch, at New Paltz, to learn watchmaking. Then the war broke out. The boy waited till he was 18, and then enlisted in the 143d New York. For three years he wore the blue, never lost a day's service, and came home Lieutenant in command of Company H and brevet Captain. He was just of age; so he got married. He went back to watchmaking, but soon was tinkering at his old press again, and decided that he must have a newspaper. He was then in Calicoon. Some of the local politicians agreed with him that Calicoon ought to have a newspaper, and promised to raise the $300 or $400 he wanted. He made arrangements with W. A. Hasbrouck, proprietor of the Orange County Press, at Middletown, for a lot of second-hand type. But the politicians of Calicoon intimated that if they furnished the money they should expect to furnish the opinions of the paper. Morgans would not hear of that. Mr. Hasbrouck agreed with him, and gave him type on credit. Morgans went over to the tannery of his father-in-law and said to him: "Let me have that old maple log lying out there."

"Of course," said Mr. Inderlied, "take her along." This was just about what Mr. Inderlied had said to the young man when he had asked for a much greater gift some months before. Morgans took the log, which was very perfectly rounded, sawed off a section, covered it with a piece of canvas for an "apron," got a piece of an old tomb-stone for the platen, and rigged up a cylinder press, on which he printed the first edition and many other editions of the Calicoon Recorder, a paper yet flourishing.

He had no good job press, and so he invented one. He called it the Hercules Press. It is in the market to-day, but, as has happened to many Inventors, he reaped little or none of the profit. He sold the Recorder, went to Liberty, started the Liberty Register. Soon he [illegible] and of the best printing offices in the [illegible] and one lost that too. One Saturday n[illegible]ate, but he went to bed with nothing in the we[illegible] ght he went to sleep thinking of type. That night he went to work and built a type machine. He awoke [illegible] of it. "I looked at my clock when I woke," he said to a SUN reporter last spring, "and it was five minutes to 6. Then I thought of the machine and like a flash it seemed to me I saw the whole thing. I sprung out of bed and pulled on my clothes. As I did so I glanced at the clock. It was just 12 o'clock. I know I hadn't been asleep. If I was asleep it was quite as wonderful, for I had made my invention. I rushed over to the office and drew a plan; then with pieces of regletand stubs of pencils I made a model. It worked all right. Then I went home and got breakfast."

Out of some rough materials procured at the blacksmiths' and some old fanning machine wheels, he made a rough machine, and showed George Youngs of Napanoch, Ulster County, what it would do. Youngs is one of the Youngs of Youngsville, and he had money. Morgans built a good machine in Napanoch. The Youngs & Morgans Manufacturing Company was formed, and began to shell out wood type by the bushel. Morgans kept his precious machine in a strong room, and no one but George Youngs saw it. No one but these two and Mrs. Morgans have ever seen one of the machines.

One night in April of 1880 the firm was burned out. Morgans decided to remove the business to Middletown. Youngs sold out his interest, except in the machine, and Morgans took a new partner in the business. A big building was put up. A strong room was built, and Morgans went at it hammer and tongs to build a new machine. When a SUN reporter visited the shop in April, 1881, one of the ordinary type-cutting machines was at work. In these machines a large frame swings on an arm. At one point is a chisel revolving 15,000 times a minute. Under this a block of wood is fastened. At another point in the frame is a tracer, and when the operator traces a pattern at this point the chisel cuts the same pattern in the block. With these machines the pattern is always larger than the letter to be cut—that is, it reduces. It is impossible to reproduce with it. A difficulty is here experienced in making borders for two colors in wood. After one lot is made and the machine altered or changed to a different size it is almost impossible to reset it so that a continuation of the same border will match the first one cut.

Near one of these machines in Morgans's type factory is a heavy door, and near that a small window with a screen so arranged that nothing in the room can be seen. Morgans went in. There was the rattle of machinery, and soon he shovelled type out of the window by the peck. "I can do the work of four men," he said when he came out; "I can make type faster than one man can saw the blocks. I can enlarge, reduce, or reproduce, and, last of all, I can make a half dozen different letters at the same time. You say, 'Seeing is believing.' Well, then, you won't believe. No man can see that machine. Why don't I patent it? Why, I'd not make a cent on it. It is simple, and once seen, could easily be changed a little, you see, and so patented. No, I can make more by keeping my own invention to myself, and using it right here."

Morgans at that time had nearly completed a press to print four colors at one impression, had patented a newspaper counter so simple that it can be used with any press, had found a new mode of polishing his wood blocks, and at parting said to the reporter:

"I'm making money at last, after years of poverty, and if I don't have any bad luck I'll promise you another invention before long that beats the type machine all to pieces."

MR. EDWARDS'S GREAT INDUCEMENTS.

Pianos and Sets of Furniture as Prizes for One Dollar Purchases of Needles.

NORWICH, April 29.—A handsome elderly gentleman, with iron-gray hair and moustache, and elegantly dressed, was arrested in this city on last Saturday on the charge of swindling servant girls. He gave his address as S. B. Edwards, New York city. His plan of operations is a peculiar one. He assumed to be an agent of the manufacturing house of Wallace Brown & Co., 393 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, and on entering a house would present a circular setting forth that each person who purchased ten packages of the "Victoria needles" for $1 would be entitled to a prize not less than $1 in value, and which might be a piano, a bedroom set, a gold watch, or a set of china ware, &c. To each purchaser Edwards handed a certificate entitling the holder to a share in the distribution of prizes. Edwards was arrested at the instance of Mrs. Lemuel Turner, who made a purchase and then concluded that she had been swindled. On the person of Edwards were found several hundred certificates, scores of circulars, and an account book which showed that he had taken $75 in this city within a few days. On being brought to Police Headquarters he cried, "Oh, my God, my family! What shall I do?" He offered Capt. Whaley all the money he had collected in this city if he would release him, and promised further to make complete restitution to all his dupes. At the hotel where he stopped was found a valise full of circulars and certificates. A private book showed that he had operated in nearly all the counties in New York State. He had that he had never been arrested before.

Selling a Government Horse.

"Well, gentlemen," said a gentleman with modest military bearing, "it's 2 o'clock, and here's the animal." The remark was addressed to a company of nine persons, including three stablemen, two of them boys, in the Government stables at 211½ Thompson street. The animal was a horse, decrepit and weary, fastened to a clothes-line halter. On one of his forward corners the letters "U S" were branded. The several persons who were not stablemen were presumably intending purchasers of the horse, who had been called together by the invitation of Lieut. Col. and Deputy Quartermaster-Gen. Henry C. Hodges to witness and participate in the sale of "one condemned horse." The horse looked nearly years old, but it was said that he had not nearly reached that age. He was regularly inspected and condemned and sold on Saturday by order of the Secretary of War. How much, gentlemen? Ten dollars. The animal is worth rather more," said the auctioneer. "Eleven." "Twelve." "Fifteen." "Going, going," said the auctioneer. "Sixteen." And so on to $25 by dollar bids. The old horse blinked kindly at the bidders. Presently $31 was bid, and some one, in unprecedented advance, bid $35. The animal was sold for $36.

Kittens Adopted by a Terrier.

In Dr. E. B. Middlebrook's stable, 170 East Seventy-eighth street, two tiny black kittens own a valuable white bull terrier for their foster mother. The terrier's progeny died at birth, and the infant kittens stepped into their places. The terrier plays with her adopted children, licks them and cuddles them when she loses her teeth and begins to fondle them. The kittens love to bite on the terrier's back when she takes her position before a favorite rat hole and waits for game. Although the scampering of the kittens would warn away the greenest rat, and the terrier seems to be aware of the fact, she does not fail into a fit with them.
