MRS. LABOUCHERE'S TRUNK.

Stolen on its Way to the Steamer—Fourteen Quietly Trimmed Hats.

The steamship Servia of the Cunard line sailed for Liverpool so early on Wednesday morning that many of the passengers went aboard on Tuesday evening, among them Mrs. Labouchere, who came to the United States with Mrs. Langtry, and is now on her way to her home in London. Mrs. Labouchere left the Albemarle Hotel, Broadway and Twenty-fourth street, where she had been staying, on Tuesday afternoon, dined with friends in the evening, and went direct to the steamer, leaving her maid, Miss Roberts, to see that her baggage was properly cared for and put aboard. When Mrs. Labouchere, in company with Miss Blanche Roosevelt, arrived at the Cunard pier at Clarkson street and the North River, she was told that one of her trunks had been stolen from the express wagon on the way from the hotel to the steamer. Naturally, she was somewhat anxious till she learned which of the six trunks was missing, for the contents of one of them was valued at $10,000. After she had made an inventory of the trunks on hand she entered the following memorandum in a small account book of John White, who has charge of the baggage at the Albemarle:

Small sail cloth imperial box labelled "Labouchere," and with buttons. Black velvet body trimmed with white lace, veil. Brown silk body, trimmed with feathers. Black body, trimmed with red silk. Black chenille shawl, &c., &c.
Mrs. LABOUCHERE, 10 Queen Anne Gate, London.

The lady betrayed only the slightest annoyance over the loss of her trunk, laughingly remarking that the contents would be of little service to the thief, and saying that it was not worth more than $500 in all, and that she would not suffer extreme hardship even if she did not recover it. She was interested in the story of the theft, however. When the trunks were ready to be sent from the hotel it was 9 o'clock in the evening, and one of Nugent's express wagons was called from the corner of Twenty-third street. Mrs. Labouchere's maid followed the trunks in a carriage half an hour later. As the express wagon was going down Clarkson street near Hudson, two women who happened to be passing on the sidewalk saw a young, rough-looking fellow dart up behind the wagon and snatch off a small light-colored trunk. They called to the driver, who stopped his horse and turned in time to see the thief making off with the trunk. The driver was afraid to leave his load unguarded, for the maid had told him that one of the trunks especially was very valuable. It is conjectured that the snatching of the small trunk and making off with it was part of a plot to get possession of the larger and more valuable pieces of baggage in case the driver should leave his wagon unguarded and give chase to the thief. The driver called for a policeman, but none was within hearing distance. The two women who had seen the thief ran after him, shouting "Stop thief!" He gained on them, but they kept near enough to see him disappear in an alley on the north side of West Houston street, a few doors east of Hudson.

After the expressman had delivered the five remaining trunks at the Cunard pier he reported the robbery at the Charles street police station, and Capt. Hedden detailed Detectives Dilks and Flanagan to search for the thief and the property. On the following morning the detectives were in the yard at 262 West Houston street, and one of them happened to climb up and look over a high board fence separating that yard from the court between the front and rear tenements at 264. On the pavement of the court he found a trunk which answered to the description of the missing one. It had been broken open and was empty. The trunk was taken to the police station. On the same evening the detectives found, in a vault of the rear tenement cellar at 264, articles which were taken to Sergeant Tuck at the police station and were invoiced on the police record book as follows: "14 lady's hats, 3 waists, 1 tattlin collar, 1 chenille shawl."

It is not known whether all the contents of the trunk have been recovered. There are fourteen hats and a collar to go under the head of "&c., &c." in the lady's memorandum of her loss. Considerable latitude of taste is displayed in the fourteen hats that have been recovered, and which to the casual observer seem to be little worse for having been in the possession of a thief and hidden in a cellar vault for the refuse of a tenement. The prevailing color is brown. The hats average small. The ornaments are quiet in tone. There are more tidy-looking brown wings than flowing plumes. The materials are straw, velvet, and felt. A sailor hat with a white straw body, plainly trimmed with blue ribbon, contrasts with a very neat black velvet turban trimmed with black velvet ribbon, jet, and a small plume. An ancient Leghorn, very fine in respect to texture, and almost entirely dismantled, bears out the inference as to the quaint taste of the owner. There are several poke bonnets, rather small, with closely clinging brown trimmings. The fourteen hats had been carefully dusted and laid on a bed in an inner room of the police station, where they were covered over with newspapers spread out.

The trunk and the recovered contents are still in the custody of the police. Baggage Superintendent White promised to send them to Mrs. Labouchere by the next Liverpool steamer if they were recovered in time.

The Demand for More School Money.

Police Commissioner Joel W. Mason told the Board of Apportionment yesterday that he and his colleagues are of the opinion that the employment of matrons in the police stations would be unwise and improper. The Mayor and President Asten expressed the opinion that matrons were needed. President Walker of the Board of Education said that new school houses were greatly needed in the upper part of the city.

Comptroller Campbell said that he was opposed to the teaching of music, French, and German in the public schools, and asked whether pupils were received in the schools who lived out of the city.

President Walker replied that truant officers who had been stationed at the ferries had, after watching for several days, that they had seen about a dozen children coming from the boats who appeared to be going to school. Mr. Walker did not believe that there were fifty out of two score pupils in the schools.

Comptroller Campbell spoke of the small cost of the schools in Brooklyn and Philadelphia as compared with those in New York, and President Walker answered that the New York schools were much better than those in either of those cities.

A Bright and Brief Career.

A little less than three months ago Harry W. Genet and a partner named Johnson started a gorgeous saloon in Warren street, a few doors west of Stewart's. It was more elegant in its fittings than any other saloon below Twenty-fourth street. When it was opened it attracted the custom of all the City Hall politicians and a fair share of the single-handed drinkers who used to frequent Stewart's. Eight hundred dollars was taken in over the bar the first day of its career. During the first month the profits averaged $100 a day. The second month they tapered down until they just paid running expenses. At that point the firm of Genet & Johnson laid down its hand and quit the game. The lease was taken back by the landlord, and the splendid fixtures were carted away. The partners aver that they did not quit losers, and that is the best they can say.

Christmas Money Orders.

The money orders sent abroad during eleven months of the year average about $1 each, and are pretty regular in their flow. But about the 1st of December they begin to increase largely, both in number and amount. People send over extra provision for Christmas gifts to the friends across the sea. The volume of these remittances increases day by day up to about the 12th of the month, and then falls off gradually until the end of the year. By Jan. 1 the ordinary level is reached. On Tuesday last 5,300 money orders were sent from here, of which the average value was $12.54. That was the busiest day for money orders. Those orders went to all parts of the world, but the greatest number to any one country were directed to Ireland.

Rubber Clothing Manufacturers.

The manufacturers of rubber clothing met at the Astor House yesterday. Geo. H. Hood of the B.ston Rubber Company presided. It was decided that the reduction of 25 per cent. in the manufacture of rubber clothing should be continued until the manufacturers could make a fair profit. The reduction has thrown between 10,000 and 15,000 men out of employment in this country and Brazil. There will be a general meeting of the manufacturers in all sections of the trade to-day.

A SATIN-LINED OVERCOAT,

Marked down from $35 to $21.75, is one of the wonders at the LONDON & LIVERPOOL Clothing Co. We have also an immense stock of elegant SATIN and SILK LINED OVERCOATS, made from materials comprising some of the finest productions of Foreign Mills. While our sale is in progress, why not call and select one? They are as rich and handsome as any merchant tailor's work that would certainly cost you from $60 to $70.

Pay us a visit and convince yourself that we advertise only that which is true.
