NARROW ESCAPES FROM FIRE.

Sleepers Aroused in the Early Morning—Fireman Kirschner's Gallant Work.

Frederick Wittpau is the proprietor of a boarding house at 138 Eldridge street. The house is an old-fashioned three-story brick structure, with two dormer windows on the third floor piercing the steep roof toward Eldridge street. Twelve persons were sleeping in the house on Wednesday night. Mr. and Mrs. Wittpau and their little girl, 8 years old, were in the front hall bedroom in the second story. In the large front room adjoining was Mrs. John Brown, wife of a coach driver, and in a room back of this were John Altries and wife. On the third floor were James McCabe, a hack driver, and his wife, and George Seighardt, Henry Hummel, Andrew Bauer, and two brothers named Smith.

At 4 o'clock yesterday morning Mrs. Altries was awakened by a sharp clawing on her cheek. She found her pet cat mewing on the bed at her side. The room was filled with smoke. She sprang from her bed, and, opening the door into the hall, was met by smoke so dense that she could scarcely breathe. Feeling her way to the railed-up door to Mrs. Brown's room, she alarmed Mrs. Brown, who opened the door into the hall, and was herself driven back by the smoke. She in turn pounded violently on the wall of the adjoining hall bedroom, and a moment afterward Mr. Wittpau rushed in with his child in his arms, and, throwing up a front window, looked out. He caught sight of his wife, a very stout woman, half out of the adjoining window, and preparing to leap. Throwing his child on the bed, Wittpau dragged his wife back, and through the hall into Mrs. Brown's room. It was well nigh impossible to breathe. He kicked an opening through the door into the rear room, where he found a window open. Several of his boarders were on the roof of a one-story stable in the rear, a few feet lower than the room in which he stood. Mrs. Wittpau sprang out, alighting on a glass skylight and receiving severe cuts. Wittpau and the child were more fortunate. Hummel, who, with the other young men, had jumped from the floor above, had struck a skylight, receiving a severe injury to the hip and a deep cut in the forehead. McCabe and his wife and Seighardt were missing.

The party climbed from the stable through a second-story window into the adjoining house and descended into the street, where they found a crowd of people gazing at the roof. McCabe had been awakened by the noise below, and he and his wife had attempted to escape through the house. The smoke blinded them and drove them back. Mrs. McCabe dashed out a pane of glass in the dormer window with her hand, wrenched the sash away, and climbed out upon the tin eave trough, which was only separated from the window by a narrow strip of shingle. Her husband followed. Seighardt climbed out from the adjoining window and succeeded in reaching the flat summit of the roof. Engine Company 17 arrived, McCabe and his wife seemed preparing to jump into the street. The crowd was shouting itself hoarse at them.

"Hold on," shouted a fireman. "Stick where you are and we'll help you in a moment."

Fireman William Kirschner dashed into the hallway of the adjoining house and soon appeared on the roof of 138. Seighardt had assisted McCabe to the flat summit, and the latter, stretched flat upon the roof, was trying in vain to reach his wife, who was helpless with rheumatism. A neighbor had brought two painter's ladders, and, strapping them together, the crowd had raised them, but the top was five feet below the cornice. The ladder was placed against the house, and Fireman Sharp tried to climb it. It was too weak to bear his weight. Kirschner dropped to the eave trough, seized Mrs. McCabe about the waist, and, taking McCabe's extended hand, climbed to the summit with her. He threw off his coat and placed it about her, and, picking her up, carried her to the roof of the next building, where he tried the scuttle, which was fast. The next building was the same. A narrow alley, four or five feet wide, separated this building from that at the corner of Delancey street. Kirschner sprang across with his burden. He dropped down one story to the roof of 60 Delancey street. McCabe handed his wife down, and the three climbed through a window into the building they had just left, and descended to the street.

The fire, which was in a basement kitchen, was soon extinguished. Hummel is at the Chambers Street Hospital. Mrs. Wittpau refused to be taken to the hospital. She is suffering from serious laceration of the leg and ankle. McCabe and his wife and Andrew Bauer were ill in bed yesterday from the effects of the smoke.

At 3 A. M. yesterday a fire broke out on the third floor of a five-story brick building at 388 Pearl street, owned by H. S. Ely. When Truck 1 arrived, Assistant Foreman James Henry was told that Mrs. Lucy Broadwell, the janitress, and her daughters, Maggie, aged 16, and Pinkie, aged 13, were asleep in their rooms, in the rear part of the fourth floor. Ladders were raised to the rear windows from the roof of a one-story stable on Oak street. Firemen John Pilger, Peter McDermott, and George McGrath ascended the ladder, and McGrath entered the window and soon returned with the younger daughter, whom he handed out to his companions. He returned, but found both beds vacant. He stumbled over the bodies of the two women, who were unconscious, on the floor. They were carried down the ladder and taken to the Oak street station house, whence they were sent to the Chambers Street Hospital. They were removed yesterday to the New York Hospital. The fire was confined to the third floor. The damage was $2,200.

BEER-DRINKING PONIES.

They Stand Up at a Chatham Street Bar and Win a Bet for their Owner.

Mr. H. R. Becker of New Brunswick, N. J., wagered Mr. S. P. Knapp of this city a basket of champagne that a span of white ponies belonging to Mr. Becker would drink beer yesterday afternoon at the bar of Mr. Kosmak's public house in Chatham street. In order to win the bet it was necessary that the ponies should drink a glass apiece. They were unhitched from a light carriage at Mr. Kosmak's door early in the afternoon and led into the barroom. The headstalls were removed, and strap halters put on. While waiting for the arrival of Mr. Knapp, the company that had gathered to see the beer-drinking ponies grew to considerable proportions. Shortly after the arrival of Mr. Knapp, two ponies of lager were placed on the bar in front of the ponies of horseflesh. The little horses sniffed at the foam on top of the glasses, and then turned their heads aside to see what the crowd of men around them meant. The glasses were held to their mouths, but they shut their jaws together and stubbornly refused to imbibe. It looked as though Mr. Knapp would win the bet.

"Bring lager beer glasses," said Mr. Becker, and glasses of the ordinary size, filled with foaming beer, were set on the bar.

When one of the large glasses was offered to Minnie, the off pony, she put her lips to the rim and drank as though she relished it. In the mean time, with a little coaxing, Tommy, the nigh pony, had sipped a small glass of the beverage; but he positively declined to drink more. Mr. Becker was disappointed. "Tommy is the heavier drinker of the two," he said, "and I can't understand it." But it was agreed by all hands that the ponies had won the bet for their owner.

The ponies are about 12 years old. Tommy has been a confirmed beer guzzler for eight years. He first began to tipple on champagne, when he was owned by Rudolph E. Schalk, son of Major Schalk, the brewer. From champagne he went to lager beer, and he usually drinks about eleven glasses when somebody offers to treat him. Minnie was drawn into the habit of beer drinking by association with Tommy.

In Favor of Ball Playing on Sunday.

Alderman Philip Casey of Brooklyn, who is one of the most skilful hand ball players in the country, yesterday urged the Park Commissioners to throw open the Prospect Park parade ground on Sunday afternoons, from May 1 to Sept. 1, between 2 o'clock and 7 o'clock, for base ball, foot ball, cricket, and other proper amusements. Mr. Casey urged that such sport was much better than spending the Sunday loafing about the streets and sneaking into liquor saloons, and that it would make young men strong and healthy, and refresh them for the work of the week. Secretary Smith, who is a Sunday school worker, emphatically condemned the proposition, and urged that the State law was against it. Mr. Casey presented his views to the Mayor, who said the action would be in conflict with old time ideas of Sunday in America, and he thought it was a question whether it was worth while to legislate in violation of these notions. Alderman Casey asked the Mayor what difference existed between his going down the road in his wagon on Sunday and playing ball. "Both are amusements," said Casey. "Either way, it is nothing but recreation." Mr. Casey got no satisfaction from the Mayor, and he will apply to the Park Commissioners formally.

Seeking to Enjoin the Removal of the Dead.

Application was made to Judge Lawrence yesterday by Arthur J. Delaney, a lawyer, for a temporary injunction restraining the trustees of St. Patrick's Cathedral from removing the bodies interred in St. Patrick's Burial Ground in East Eleventh street. Mr. Delaney said that he appeared for himself individually, and that it was a personal contest in which he was deeply interested, because he had two sisters and a brother buried in the cemetery. He offered his personal bond for $500 as surety on the application. Judge Lawrence said that under the statute a counsel of the court could not be accepted as surety in any case. Although of the opinion that a surety was necessary, he would take the papers and consider the application.

Chinese, but Not Without Friends.

A number of women from Dr. Behrend's church appeared before Justice Walsh yesterday to intercede for Ah Chun, a Chinese laundryman of Fulton avenue and St. Felix street, who was accused of having assaulted W. H. Conkley, a negro, of 650 Fulton street. The Chinaman is a member of a Sunday school class in the Central Congregational Church, and is deemed such a promising convert that the women interceded with the nerve until he agreed to forgive Ah Chun.

ENLIGHTENING THE POLICE.

Surgeons Telling them How to Render Prompt Aid to Injured Persons.

The first of a series of five "First Aid to the Injured" lectures was delivered to the off platoons of the New and Oak street police at the Central Office yesterday. Dr. A. E. Nichols lectured to the New street policemen in the trial room, while Dr. W. H. Murray delivered a similar lecture to the squad from Oak street in the adjoining drill room. When the course of lectures is completed it will be repeated to the other platoons of the squads named, and to the policemen of other precincts, so that in the course of time every policeman in the city will have heard it. When a policeman has attended all the lectures, he will be examined by Dr. Morton, the chief physician of the First Aid to the Injured Society, and if he passes a satisfactory examination on what he has heard, he will get a certificate setting forth that he is competent to act in the cases of emergency which it is the object of the society to provide against. The lectures are given to the police at the expense of the society. Attendance upon them is compulsory.

In beginning his lecture yesterday, Dr. Nichols, after alluding to the medals which were given to four policemen on Tuesday for rescuing the inmates of a burning tenement, in Washington street, in July last, said that the man who stopped an artery from bleeding saved life as positively as if he rescued a person from drowning, or from a fiery death. Fifteen minutes nearly always elapsed, he continued, before an ambulance arrived to convey the victim of an accident to the hospital, and it was this fifteen minutes which should be filled by a policeman. It is his duty to apply the first aid to the injured; the doctor will apply the second. Scores of persons die every year who could be saved were they properly cared for in the interval between the accident and the arrival of the surgeon. Dr. Nichols told his hearers that they must above all things be cool in the emergencies under consideration. An excited man does harm, while the cool man does the right thing at the right time. The lecturer then displayed the chart of a skeleton, and proceeded to impart sufficient knowledge of anatomy to enable his listeners to know how to stop a hemorrhage. Two policemen bared their arms, and each of the others in turn pressed on the artery at the inside of the upper part of the arm, in order to be able when necessary to stop bleeding from a wound in the hand or forearm. The lecturer told the policemen to frequently feel each his own pulse so as to get acquainted with the feeling, in order that he might know where an artery was even if the flow of blood was feeble. He told them how to stop bleeding of the arm near the shoulder by pressing a key in the hollow space in the shoulder behind the collar bone, and how, in case of a cut on the leg, to rest the leg on a chair, so that the pressure of its own weight on the large rear artery would stop the blood from flowing. He cautioned them not to permit a man who had lost much blood to make the least motion, as motion called for an increased action of the heart. The speaker also told how to distinguish by its color and flow between arterial and venous blood.

In conclusion, the lecturer warned the policemen that he would question them at the next lecture on what he had talked about, and would expect them to designate the modes of stopping hemorrhage by pressing the arteries in different parts of the body.
