ENTRAPPING JESSE JAMES.

CHARLEY FORD RECOUNTS HIS CONNECTION WITH THE OUTLAW.

Taking Part in the Blue Cut Robbery to Win James's Confidence and Accomplish his Capture—Gov. Crittenden Promising a Reward and Immunity from Punishment.

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 7.—Charley Ford, brother of the boy who killed the notorious outlaw, Jesse James, and who is now under $5,000 bonds on a charge of complicity in the Blue Cut train robbery, made a statement yesterday, in which he recounts his connection with the James gang and the negotiations with the authorities which led to the killing of James. The statement is as follows:

"When I first met Jesse James, two years ago last fall, when he came to my house with Ed Miller, I knew there was a reward for his capture, so I treated him nicely to win his confidence, and the better to negotiate with Gov. Crittenden toward breaking up the gang. I was then living in Ray county. I one day saw by the papers that Gov. Crittenden would be in Kansas City on a certain night to attend a ball at the Board of Trade Hall, so I sent Bob up to see him. He found the Governor, and told him he wanted to talk with him on private business. The Governor asked the nature of the business, and Bob told him he would rather not tell him until morning. The Governor said he would rather hear it then, so he could study over it during the night. Bob then told him that he wanted to see him in regard to the breaking up of the James gang, and a meeting was arranged to be held at the St. James Hotel on the following day at 10 o'clock. I had then been with Jesse some time, and Bob and I thought we would kill him and break up the gang, believing we would be rewarded for it. I got acquainted with Jesse through Ed Miller, whom I had known for some time, he having purchased stock of father. He told me that he knew Jesse. I was anxious to see the man who had defied the world to capture him, and asked Miller to bring him to my house. Miller said the first time he saw Jesse he would do so. That was a short time before the Glendale train robbery. I met Jesse about two weeks previous to the robbery. Jesse came to my house one night for supper, and Miller introduced him as Johnson, a stock man. Johnson asked if I had stock for sale, and I said yes. He said he would look at the stock, which he did, and then asked me my price on them. I gave him a price, but did not talk business, as I came to the conclusion that he was not a stock man. He stooped down to get a stick to whittle and I saw that he had a pair of pistols on him. I invited them to the house and asked Miller what that man was doing with the revolvers. Ed said: 'Let's walk down to the stable and I will tell you.' When he got there he said: 'Charley, to be honest with you, it is Jesse James.' I said: 'Ed, why didn't you tell me sooner who it was?' and he said that Jesse requested him not to tell. They stayed all the next day, and the next evening after supper he left. I didn't let Jesse know that I knew who he was.

"About eight days later a man called at my house with a man who he introduced as Bob Grimes, who proved to be Wood Hite of Kentucky. They stayed at my house all night and the next day, leaving the next night after supper. While at my house Jesse asked if I had a revolver, and I said yes, I had a good one. He asked if he could borrow it, and I said certainly. He took the revolver and buckled it on. I saw he had two pistols with him. Jesse said he wanted of so many. He said that was his business. He then asked if I had a shotgun, and I told him yes, and he asked if he could borrow it. I told him he could, and he said: 'If I need your gun and send a note for it will you send it to me?' I told him I would. In a short time he sent a note saying that he did not need the gun, and was much obliged to me for lending him the pistol. He signed the note Dave Johnson. He went on and looked at my horse, and he said, 'Charley, if you miss the boy here from the left some morning don't be at all uneasy; he will turn up some morning all right, and rest assured that I have him. He is just the sort of a horse that will suit me.' I told him that at any time he needed a horse, or anything he longing to me, he was perfectly welcome to it. A few days after he left I heard of the Glendale robbery, and after I heard of that I said to Bob, 'That settles it; Johnson was into that.' A few days afterward I heard of the officers being after Ed. Miller and that he had left the State. I did not know then that Ed was a member of the gang, but knew that he was acquainted with Jesse and that his brother had belonged to the gang. In a short time I received a letter from Ed Miller, dated at Nashville, and signed Ed. Wilson; but he did not say anything about Jesse. He said he himself was all safe, and that there was no danger. I did not hear anything more from Miller until July 8, 1882. Jesse James came to my house and I asked him where Miller was. He told me that he was in Nashville, well and hearty. I invited Jesse up to my room, as there was company at my house. When he got up to the room he pulled off his coat and I saw he had two pistols buckled on him, and two extra belts with cartridges. I had one of my pistols lacking at it, and he pulled out one of his, remarking, 'You have got a match for one of my pistols.' I asked him, 'Why are you carrying two belts?' He said: 'Well, I am in Missouri I am in a great dread of danger, and I like to carry extra cartridges.' The next day he left, but returned in a few days with a man whom he introduced as Charley Anderson, who proved to be Dick Liddell. They stayed until the following Sunday. I did not hear anything more of them for four or five months, when I got a letter mailed on the train at Louisville, Ky. A few days later Jesse came to my house with a man with me he introduced as Jack Hall. Hall was Wood Hite's brother-in-law.

"One Sunday, while Frank and Dick Liddell were at my house, my aunt came and stayed until after dinner. That was in July, 1881. She came up to my room, where Dick was reading. When she saw that Dick had his pistols buckled on she called me to one side, and wanted to know why that man wore pistols. Frank overheard the conversation. In a few days he left and told Jesse about it. When Jesse came he asked why the lady noted so. I told him how the thing stood, and he became incensed, saying, 'Indeed! It is a good thing I wasn't here, for I would have killed the whole family. After breakfast he went up stairs, and he and Bob got into a game of cards, and Bob lent him out of $50. Jesse then said he didn't think that Bob and I were his friends, and that he would leave the house and never come there again. He then drew his pistol, picked up his hat, and started to go down stairs. Bob drew his pistol and went after him. They walked to the stable, and Jesse asked my nephew, Wide Ridgeon, if he would saddle my horse for him. Wide went into the stable and his horse stayed outside, talking to Bob. When the horse came Jesse mounted, with drawn revolver, and rode away facing Bob. He didn't return to my house again for some time, but sent me a note asking me to come to his mother's house, as he wanted to see me on important business. I went to see him, and stayed over night.

"After we started off he asked me if I wouldn't like to go with him and rob a train or bank. I told him I would, and after we got down home he told me he wanted to rob a train or bank somewhere, but did not know just where he would commit the robbery. He asked me to come to Kansas City with him. I came with him, and when I got here we went out in a buggy to the corner of Independence and Grand avenues. There he told me to go to a Rotel and stay over night, and to meet him the next day at Independence, where the dirt road crosses the C. & T. Railroad. We stopped at the Lindell Hotel, and the next day took the Missouri Pacific train and met him at the place named. Jesse and his half brother, Johnny Samuels, rode down together in a buggy. They invited me to get in the buggy, and we drove up to the edge of Independence, where he gave me a cigar, and said: 'You and Johnny go to smoking, as it will keep off suspicion.' After we drove out he talked with a man whose name I could never learn, and afterward we returned to Kansas City. Jesse got out on Independence avenue, somewhere near Troost avenue, and told us to drive the buggy to a livery stable on Delaware street, between Missouri avenue and Sixth street. We then went to the Lindell and went to bed. The next night we took the train, I going to Liberty and Samuels to Kearney. I went home I told Bob that Jesse was somewhere in Kansas City, and that if we went to the Governor we might make some arrangement to get him. Bob said: 'All right, I will go to the Governor, and if I can make any arrangements to capture him, I shall do so.'

"A few days after the Blue Cut train was robbed Jesse came to my house for me to come to Kansas City with him, and I did so. Jesse and I came on horseback from Kearney, reaching here about daybreak. On the avenue the next afternoon he asked me if we would go to Smith & Keating's and get him a wagon, and we did so. He asked me to buy a light double harness, and we purchased it at a shop on Main street, near Fourth. We then got a new wagon and drove back to a livery stable on Grand avenue, near Twelfth street, where we put up for the night. The next day we left for St. Joseph, and rented a house at Twenty-first and Lafayette streets, living there for two months. Jesse went by his name then as Thomas Howard. We then moved to Thirteenth and Lafayette streets. I went down to his mother's to see him, but he had left there; so we went to my house to see Bob, who told me what arrangements he had made with the Governor. He said he had seen the Governor, and the Governor said that he would give us a reward if we would bring in Jesse James—$10,000 if alive, or $10,000 if dead. Bob told him he would bring him in, but did not promise whether dead or alive. Gov. Crittenden said: 'Bring him in, and you shall have the reward.' He said that if we wanted more men to call on Craig or Timberlake, who would furnish all the assistance we wanted. Bob then talked with Timberlake and Craig at the latter's office, saying: 'Gentlemen, I have made arrangements with Gov. Crittenden to capture Jesse James, and he has referred me to you in case I need any assistance outside of my brother and myself.' They said: 'We are at your service, and will furnish you with any number of men you want at any time.' Bob said: 'My brother Charles is with Jesse James, and I can not hear just where he is at present, but will hear from him in a short time, and when I hear from him I will join him, and if I think it best to telegraph you for help I will do so; if not, we will try to do the work ourselves.'

"A short time afterward I received my brother Bob at my uncle's, three miles from Mrs. Samuels'. He then told me what arrangements had been made with the officers. Capt. Craig, Gov. Crittenden, and Timberlake told Bob that if we would bring Jesse in they would stick to us to the last and see that no harm befel us. Bob and I then went to St. Joseph, and when we got there Jesse would not let us leave him to send a telegram to Craig or Timberlake, saying that he found we could neither send a despatch nor capture him we killed him. When he was killed we sent a telegram to Gov. Crittenden, Timberlake, and Craig, and went to the Marshal's office and gave ourselves up. While we were at the Court House standing examination, Timberlake and Craig arrived. We told how things were, and Craig and Timberlake told the Marshal that we were authorized by Gov. Crittenden to kill Jesse James, and that we would not be punished for it. After our pardon we returned to Kansas City with Craig, Timberlake, and other officers, and Craig gave us a pair of United States pistols that were sent by Gov. Crittenden, and told us to buckle them on and consider ourselves officers, and that any time he should call on us to be ready to go. He called on us several times, and we were sent out, staying as long as two weeks at a time.

"Craig knew I was connected with the Blue Cut robbery, and promised me that I should be protected from everything. I did not go into the robbery for the purpose of making money but to win the confidence of Jesse James and his gang. After the robbery I returned everything I got to the owners. My share was $135 in money and a gold watch and chain. The robbery was planned in Kansas City, at Jesse James's house, there being present Jesse James, Johnny Samuels, and myself. I have been denounced as a robber, but I want the people of Missouri to know that I joined the gang to break up, and rejoiced for the purpose of plunder. I did not see Frank James while the robbery was being planned, but saw him when it was perpetrated. Jesse and Frank usually met privately and made their arrangements, trusting no one with the main part of their business.

"Before we negotiated with Gov. Crittenden we knew everything connected with the pursuit of the gang, the matter being given away by Jesse's friends. Jesse said he had a good many more officers and friends than they kept him posted. He said that after he killed Askew he went to Sheriff Patton's house, stayed over night, and told him what he had done. The Sheriff then got a posse of men and went out to see if they could find the men who killed Askew. During the search Jesse stayed at the Sheriff's house. Jesse knew all the officers of the city who were pursuing him, and often remarked that they would never catch him. He said he did not think any of them were anxious to meet him, as they knew no man could kill him without being killed in return. He did not have much of an opinion of the officers of Jackson county, but was afraid of Pinkerton. Jesse said that when the officers were in the vicinity of his house he met Marshal Murphy and his men in the wood, and would see the moon reflect from their guns. Bill Ryan and Dick Liddle were with Jesse at the time. Jesse ordered them to draw their revolvers, and the three rode past the officers, intending if challenged to make an effort to take them. The officers, who had their pistols in their hands, rode by without saying a word. Jesse said the officers knew the men he was with, but did not want to meet them. That was after the Glendale robbery. After the Blue Cut robbery Jesse came to this city and wrote a letter to the Chief of Police of Nashville, Tenn., stating that Frank James, Dick Liddle, Clarence and Wood Hite would arrive at Nashville on a certain day, described the men, and asked the officer to have them arrested. The Chief showed me them at the train, which Liddle was taking to Alabama. The Chief showed the letter to him, and the handwriting was at once recognized. Talk about traitors! Jesse James was the biggest kind of a traitor, for he gave his own brother away. Jesse's mother told a lady that Jesse had determined to kill Bob and me after the Platte River robbery, so if we had not killed him he would have killed us."

Charley Ford is in jail in this city, and is very anxious about his future. He evidently relies on the Governor to see him through safely, which may not be done. In the Records Court yesterday afternoon Ford was fined $200 for carrying a revolver without authority. Commissioner Crane and Chief of Police Speers testified that they believed such protection necessary since the killing of Jesse James, but the court held it insufficient grounds, and the defence gave notice of appeal.

War Material for China.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 7.—On Thursday last 500 cases of ammunition and arms were sent on the Pacific mail steamship Comstock. The ammunition cases had the brand "United States Government, 45 calibre," and all the cases were from Springfield, Mass. It is now asserted that during the past eighteen months regular shipments have been made, but no pains seem to be taken to C. S. Smith, Shanghai. During that period 240,000 Springfield rifles and 25,000,000 cartridges in all have been forwarded, besides from 500 to 800 bales of cotton duck suitable for tents, by express or by each steamer for China. The total value of the war material approximates to $5,000,000.
