THE DWIGHT INSURANCE CASES.

Trying to Show that Policies were Obtained by Misrepresentation and Fraud.

NORWICH, N. Y., Nov. 14.—The Dwight cases were resumed this morning, and Secretary Lloyd's examination was continued. The gist of his testimony was to show the circumstances under which and the time when the policy issued by the Mutual Life of New York was cancelled. The application was put in evidence, with Col. Dwight's answers, which, it was claimed, conflicted with the answers made in the Germania application. The testimony of this witness and Fayette P. Brown, agent of the Mutual Life at Yonkers, was to prove misrepresentation and fraud by Col. Dwight in procuring the Germania policy.

Joseph L. Hillman of Troy, an agent for the Connecticut Mutual Life, proved certain transactions which, the defence claimed, went to establish the claim that Dwight did not have a policy in that company, as stated in the Germania application. The cross-examination, documents, letters, and other papers were brought out, which proved that Dwight's application for a policy in the Connecticut Mutual had been received by that company, and a policy written and forwarded to the local agent at Binghamton for delivery to Col. Dwight at the time of his application in the Germania Company. This evidence was confirmed by Lowell A. Harding, the Binghamton agent, who testified to having sent the application and received the policy, of his notifying Dwight that he held it for payment of premium, and of his final return of it on the order of the company on Sept. 24, 1883. The application was made on July 31, and the policy was received by him on Aug. 22.

Robert M. Forsman of Williamsport, Pa., testified to his acquaintance and business relations with Dwight in 1866 and 1867; to Dwight's being, up to March, 1867, at the Herdic House, where he boarded; to his being called into Dwight's room by Mrs. Dwight one morning when the Colonel had bled freely from the lungs; to seeing half a pint of blood in a vessel; to Dwight's coughing hard and raising blood in his presence, and to his acknowledgment that he had had hemorrhage.

Peter Herdic testified to seeing Dwight spit blood in the street when he had had a hard fit of laughing, followed by coughing, and to Dwight's saying: "I have had hemorrhage, and the damned thing will take me off yet." This was in March, 1867.

Charles Barfell, also of Williamsport, testified to having visited Dwight in a room at the Herdic House, in company with witness's father, on business, in which the Colonel wanted to sell the father some Canada lumber stock. He said he "had a lung difficulty and a hemorrhage, and he had more stock than he could carry and had kept $10,000 in stock for father." These witnesses agreed that Dwight appeared to have a cold, and that the spitting of blood followed violent coughing and wrenching. This closed the evidence for the day.

WEST POINT MILITARY ACADEMY.

Sixty-seven Cadets Taught to Swim—Hazing Not Entirely Broken Up.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The annual report of Gen. Merritt, Superintendent of the West Point Military Academy, says that on Sept. 1, 1883, there were at the Academy 55 professors and commissioned officers and 311 cadets. There were no deaths during the year among the cadets, officers, or soldiers. The percentage of sick to the command is one-fifth of one per cent. This year, for the first time, instruction in swimming has been given to the fourth class. Sixty-seven members of the class which entered in June, who could not swim, were taught, and at the end of the instruction three-fourths of the class could swim the Hudson River, and all the class, with two exceptions, were good swimmers. The average cost of subsisting each cadet during the last year was $17.92 per month. The general tone and discipline of the cadets are good. For the half year ended May 31 nearly one-half of the cadets had no demerits recorded against them. Cadets have been held to a strict accountability for all violations of the regulations, and uniform punishments have been fixed for the more serious neglects and unmilitary conduct.

The Superintendent says that while his predecessors for the last twenty-five years have reported at one time or another that the practice of hazing had been broken up, it is his experience that they have, without exception, been mistaken. He adds: "By repressive measures the evil has been at times restricted to its lowest limits, but has never been eradicated. Just the moment repression has ceased, the brutal custom has sprung up with new features of brutality. While I do not favor threats to repress disorders or pledges from cadets as a means of eradicating violations of the regulations, I am certain that the best means of maintaining discipline in any organization is the certainty of summary punishment, just, but severe, in all cases of intentional offence. If cadets wantonly violate the regulations in anything which involves their dismissal, they do so under one or another of the convictions that they will not be detected, or that some influence will prevent their punishment. In the matter of hazing the authorities here will indulge in no half hearted measures to detect the offenders. In the matter of punishment the experience of the past should convince the guilty that they should not expect mercy from the War Department. Under these circumstances, I see no reason why the pernicious practice may not permanently be put an end to."

In concluding his report, he calls attention to the departments of instruction, in which he says there is everything to commend, and that it would be strange if the young officers turned out by the Academy at the present time were not exceptionally superior.

Young Victor Von Bulow Arrested.

Victor Von Bulow of 186 Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn, was a clerk for Kiggins, Took & Co., pocket-book manufacturers of 125 William street. The firm suspected he was robbing them, and Detective Mahoney was detailed to watch him on his way from the store to his home. On Tuesday evening he called at a fancy goods store at 150 Atlantic avenue, and, opening a satchel, emptied fifteen pocketbooks on the counter. He offered them for sale at a nominal price. The detective entered when the bargain was in progress, and before it was concluded he placed him under arrest. Von Bulow admitted that he had been robbing his employers for months, and told where he had sold over $300 worth of pocketbooks. He was held for examination.

Three years ago he first came under the observation of the police. He was then employed in the Brooklyn Gold Watch Factory. Over 200 missing watch cases were found concealed in his bedroom. Owing to his youth and the respectability of his family he was not prosecuted. The next obtained employment in the publishing house of Johnson & Co., in Murray street. He was suspected of having opened the safe one day and stolen money and jewelry to the value of $400. He acknowledged his guilt, but again escaped prosecution. He dresses in good style. He belonged to a club of Brooklyn young men, and was fond of playing poker.

Six Men Accused of Theft.

John Mooney, a special policeman employed by L. Boyers's Sons of 90 Wall street, who transport cargoes from Quarantine to this city and Brooklyn, saw two rowboats early yesterday morning come alongside the barge Whitman, lying at the foot of Jorralemon street, Brooklyn. He summoned the police, who, when they arrived, found thirteen bags and fourteen mats of sugar, valued at $100, in the boats. The private mark showed that they had been taken from the barge. Thaw Wilson, aged 35 years, of 13 Atlantic street, and David McDonald, aged 40, of 116 Bergen street, the occupants of the boats, were arrested, as were Peter Peterson and George W. Irving, the watchmen on the barge. Patrick Nolan of 19 Carroll street and William Summers of 6 Tiffany place were found at the foot of Irving street with a handcart, in which it is supposed they intended to carry away the sugar. They were arrested, not being able to give a satisfactory account of their movements. The six prisoners were held by Justice Bergen.

Lessons in Housewifery.

Twenty-four young ladies, forming Miss Huntington's normal class in training teachers for industrial and mission work, received their first lesson yesterday morning at 125 St. Mark's place in the method of managing a kitchen garden. This is a school in housework conducted like a kindergarten. In it children are taught to kindle fires, wait on the door, make beds, sweep and dust, wash and iron clothes, lay the dinner table, and bake. Then comes the mud pie plan, in which, by using modeling clay as a substitute for dough and pastry, children are taught to knead, roll, cut out biscuit, and make pies. All lessons are enlivened with songs. In this way, under the name of play, children are taught all household duties.

Informing the Grand Jury.

The Oyer and Terminer Grand Jury continued its session yesterday in the General Term room of the Superior Court. Assistant District Attorney Vincent, it is understood, made a statement embodying the results of the investigation of the Finance Department and the Water Register's Bureau of the Department of Public Works by several General Sessions Grand Juries. This is a move with a view to start the Grand Jury fairly in its work of investigation. It is understood that the jury will give its attention at the outset to alleged irregularities in the Department of Public Works.

He Wished to Marry as Well as his Brother.

Morris Dampsky was held in $2,500 bail yesterday in a suit against him by Anna Zeiss, who claims $10,000 damages for alleged breach of promise of marriage. She asserts that after a public betrothal between herself and Dampsky, according to the Jewish custom, he refused to marry her, saying that his brother was engaged to a girl who would bring him $400, and that he could do better than to wed a poor girl. He would give her $50 he said, so that she could go to Europe, and if that was not satisfactory he would leave the city.

Willing to Make a Return of the Votes.

Judge Donohue gave a hearing yesterday on the application made on behalf of William P. Kirk, who claims to have been elected Alderman, for the inspectors of election of the Eighth election district of the Second Assembly district to make a return of the votes cast for Alderman in that district. James Oliver, representing the inspectors, stated that they were quite willing to do this, and the matter was postponed until to-day, the counsel, in the mean time, to agree upon the order to be made in the case.

Two Raids on Mr. Lombard.

Thieves entered the house of Loring L. Lombard, at 139 West Thirteenth street, through the front windows of the drawing room while the family were at dinner about three weeks ago, and stole $100 in money. Access to the windows was gained from a veranda. They repeated the exploit on last Thursday at the same hour, and took $1,000 worth of jewelry and clothing.
