FORGETFUL FINANCIERS.

Some Wall Street Men Whose Memories Need Refreshing.

The hearing before Judge Van Brunt in the suit of the Metropolitan against the New York and Manhattan Elevated Railroad Companies was continued yesterday, and Gen. Francis C. Barlow, with his associate, Mr. J. C. Carter, made strenuous efforts to extract some testimony for the plaintiff from a number of unwilling witnesses, whose chief answers were, "I do not know," "I do not recollect." Several of the witnesses did not respond to the subpœna, and it was hinted to the Court that an application would be made to compel their attendance. Then several hours were expended in a vain efforts to get from Dayton & Earl, stock brokers, the particulars of their transactions in the stock of the elevated roads. The plaintiffs sought to show from these witnesses that they were really employed by Jay Gould and Washington E. Connor to make an application to the receivers of the Manhattan Company to bring an action against the Metropolitan and New York Companies to recover $13,000,000. The purpose was to show that this was really a movement of the Gould party to threaten litigation, and that its object was to bring about the famous October agreement, which the Metropolitan now alleges was made against the interests of its real stockholders by the Gould party during their temporary control.

The brokers could not remember who instigated their action in getting a legal opinion from ex-Judge Emott in favor of their side, and positively refused to disclose the nature of their transactions with Gould and Connor.

Ill success also attended the efforts of the plaintiff's lawyers to learn from Broker Edward Brandon or Charles E. Silkworth, a clerk of W. E. Connor & Co., or from Edward A. Gwin, another clerk, the nature of their transactions in elevated railway stock. Although stock stood in the names of Messrs. Silkworth and Gwin, they could not give any information except that they did not own it. The plaintiff asserts that their names were used to conceal the personality of the Gould party.

Mr. George J. Gould, son of Jay Gould, was subpœnaed to bring certain books containing records of transactions in elevated railway stocks. He appeared without the books, and a long discussion ensued as to whether the Court should compel the production of the books. Mr. Gould could not give from memory any account of the elevated railway stocks that stood in his name. He did not know who owned them, and could not tell whether they belonged to his father or to W. E. Conner & Co. Here is a part of his testimony:

Q—Have you any recollection about the stock standing in your name? A—No, sir. There may have been some stock put in my name for election purposes—but I never owned any. I never owned any.

Q—Well, you say there may have been. Have you some recollection or knowledge of such a transaction? A—I do not remember now. There may have been stock put in my name.

Q—Do you recollect having been called upon to transfer stock that had been put in your name? A—No, sir. There may have been, but you know, and I may have been called upon to sign it. I often did sign off stocks in that way, standing in my name, and also in the name of the firm. I just signed without thinking any more about it.

Q—That was a common practice, was it? A—Yes. It is a common practice of the street.

Q—Is a common practice for your firm? A—Yes, sir.

Q—Did you hold stock in that way for your father? A—No, sir. The stock stood in my name. I do not know who owned it.

Q—It must have been either the firm or your father, must it not? A—I do not know, sir.

Q—Do you remember of ever having any stock in your name for any other person than your father or your firm? A—I do not remember.

Q—If any stock thus stood in your name was it not either that of your father or of the firm? A—I do not know, sir, whether it was owned by the firm or by some one else. I did not know anything about the accounts at the time.

Q—But you don't recollect holding any for anybody else. Is that true? A—Well, stocks that the firm takes from customers will stand in my name, you know.

Q—But you hold for your firm, or for your father, as the case may be, did you not? A—Any outside party, any customer owns it. It belongs to him.

Q—But it would not be in your name unless money had been loaned on it, or something of that sort, would it? A—I do not think it likely.

Q—Did you hold any stock in your name except in connection with some business of your father or the firm of W. E. Conner & Co.? A—The firm must have had some connection with it.

Q—Either by loaning money on it or borrowing it? A—Yes, sir. Or it may belong to a customer.

Q—Do you remember any stock held in your name that had been bought for a customer? A—I do not remember about the stock which you say stood in my name. I do not remember anything in connection with it now.

Q—Is there anything upon the books of your firm that would enable you to recollect anything about that? A—I do not know, sir. There may be. I do not know anything about the books. I never had anything to do with them. I suppose it could be told. I do not know. I do not understand bookkeeping myself.

Judge Van Brunt declined to order Mr. Gould to bring the books to court, although Mr. Carter asserted that the witness had made no effort to obey the subpœna and bring the books. Mr. Gould declared that he had looked for them, but could not find them. He admitted that he had not asked his clerks to hunt for them.

Cyrus W. Field was the next witness. He is one of the defendants. He told of his agency in securing the tripartite agreement of May 20, 1879, under which the roads were run in unison under one management. He said he was one of many who brought about that agreement. He was elected a director of the New York Company in May, 1877, and a director of the Manhattan Company in March, 1879. He understood that the object of the formation of the Manhattan Company was to make the agreement possible for New York. He admitted the issue of $13,000,000 stock of the Manhattan Company, which he said was given, dollar for dollar, to the holders of the stock of the other companies.

Several questions were asked by Mr. Carter as to the amount of stock owned by Mr. Field. This line of inquiry was objected to by Mr. David Dudley Field, the brother of the witness, one of the counsel for the defence. Judge Van Brunt excluded the questions, but permitted inquiry as to the amount of Mr. Field's holding of the stock at the time of the October agreement. Then Mr. Carter pressed his questions upon that point, but Mr. Field could not possibly tell. He said there were others associated with him who had gone out of the business, and it would be impossible to tell without looking over his books how much he really did own at that time. Indeed, he did not know that he could tell even if he did look at his books.

Mr. Carter began by asking whether it was 20,000 shares. Mr. Field said "No," and kept saying "No" as Mr. Carter suggested some figures down to 12,000 shares, when Mr. Field said that he could not remember, but that he owned a very large amount. Incidentally he remarked that at one time he did not like the way things were managed, and sold out about all his interest in the open market and went abroad. On his return he said he met his son on the dock and found that he had eighty-three shares left. This he ordered his son to sell before he could get up to his house from the dock.

"Ah!" observed Mr. Carter. "I wish your memory was as exact about other matters."

Mr. David Dudley Field fired up at this, and, rising in considerable heat, said: "I consider that remark offensive. It is very offensive."

Mr. Cyrus W. Field testified that he was opposed to the arrangement by which the receivers were appointed in 1881, but could not help its consummation. He had been permitted to select the receivers, and finally assented to the arrangement, and gave bonds for Mr. Dillon and Mr. Holly for $500,000. He said he had made it a condition than the bonds issued by the Manhattan Company should not be made a lien on the property of the New York Company.

The examination of Mr. Field will be continued this morning.

MILK PRODUCERS IN COUNCIL.

The Old Erie Mutual Association Merged into the Farmers' Milk Company.

NEWBURGH, Nov. 21.—The Erie Mutual Milk Producers' Association had an annual meeting and general reunion in the Court House at Goshen to-day. Every seat was occupied and every town in the county represented.

Wm. P. Richardson, the President of the association, said that one object of the meeting was to consider the question of disbanding the association and merging it into the Farmers' Milk Company (Limited), which is an incorporated body under the laws of the State. He urged that the interests of the farmers could best be subserved by unity of organization.

A resolution providing for the dissolution of the association and recommending the members who have not already done so to subscribe for at least one share of the capital stock of the Farmers' Milk Company, providing the stock company agreed to use every effort to sustain the prices agreed upon between the independent milk dealers and the old association for the balance of the year, was unanimously adopted.

President Richardson read a letter signed by F. W. Seward as a sympathizer present in Goshen, and published in the New York Tribune of Sunday, which, he said, was a stigma upon all of the milk producers of Orange county, and he for one did not propose to rest quietly under it. The letter stated that the Doctor had recently had three cases of typhoid fever in the family of a farmer, and that a thorough search had developed the fact that the well which supplied water to the dairy cattle was located in a barnyard. This water was so foul and so impregnated with drainage from the yard and the manure heap above it, that it actually sickened him, and compelled some men who were employed in sinking the well to stop their work. Similar examples, he said, could be mentioned by the score in Orange county, they being very common even among the better educated and more thrifty class of farmers. After the reading of the letter resolutions were offered to the effect that the Orange county dairymen were unwilling to rest under such a stigma, and respectfully requesting Dr. Seward to name the farms whose management gave to the statement made by him in the Tribune. A committee was appointed to wait on Dr. Seward to ascertain the names of persons whom he claims are shipping the infected milk to the New York market.

After the vote had been declared, President John Reilly, the successful candidate for Register, said that he believed that the vote for this office had been tampered with to enable persons to win bets that Jacob Hess, the Republican candidate, would poll 65,000 votes. Mr. Reilly said he could not tell that his vote should be 80,000, and that Hess's vote should be under 64,000.

HIDDEN IN FOG.

The Bridge Receipts Nearly Doubled by Yesterday's Mist.

A heavy fog from the sea enveloped the city yesterday morning. Ferry travellers in Brooklyn who could do so crossed by the bridge. On the down town ferries to Hunter's Point and Williamsburgh the boats were stopped on Tuesday evening, and trips were not resumed until 9 A. M. yesterday. On Fulton Ferry, about the same time, the usual number of boats began to be run. While the fog continued the boats carried few passengers. Probably half of the travellers who usually cross at Fulton Ferry took to the bridge.

Crowds of people flocked to the office and crowded the Brooklyn entrance to the bridge. The cars ran regularly, with a few exceptions. To prevent accident policemen were stationed on the track at intervals of 200 feet, with white and red flags. A motley Brakeman's whole duty track was clear. The promenade was well filled all the forenoon, while a stream of carts and wagons kept the driveway busy. It was estimated that the receipts last evening were nearly double the average daily fares.

The steamer Bristol of the Fall River line did not arrive at her pier until noon yesterday. The fog was so dense on the Sound that she stopped at Whitestone. Leaving there she groped her way half the big effect, she left this city on time yesterday.

Shooting Himself Accidentally.

John Fischer, superintendent in Bechtel's brewery at Stapleton, Staten Island, went shooting rabbits near Richmond on Tuesday. While he was walking along the road he met Sheriff Brown drove up in a buggy, and the two stopped to talk. Fischer saw a rabbit run across the road, and seized his gun, which he had laid down against some bushes, with both hammers up. As he pulled the muzzle toward him the triggers caught on some bushes, and both barrels were discharged into his stomach, making a terrible wound, from which he died in a few minutes. Sheriff Brown carried the body to the County Court House. Where an inquest was held Fischer leaves a large family.

Mrs. McCarthy Hits a Man.

Mrs. Ellen McCarthy yesterday caused the arrest of her husband Michael, a waiter in the New York Hotel, for failing to support her. Thomas Barclay of East Twenty seventh street told Justice Duffy that Mrs. McCarthy was a woman of bad character. The Justice dismissed the case. As Barclay left Jefferson Market Mrs. McCarthy slapped him in the face. He walked away from her in disgust, and she followed him, hitting him twice in the face with her fist, cutting his upper lip and making his nose bleed. Assisted by Policeman Mullin he took her into the court room again, and preferred a charge of assault and battery against her. Justice Duffy held her for trial in $500 bail.
