THE TRIAL OF JAMES NUTT.

Medical Experts Testifying to his Insanity—The Dukes Letters in Evidence.

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 18.—There was no diminution of the interest taken in the Nutt trial this morning, but the manner of admitting sightseers has been so improved that there was no crowding, and the court room filled up gradually and was comfortable when the prisoner was brought in. He looked better than he did yesterday, and said that he had passed a comfortable night. Miss Lizzie Nutt is still prostrated, and is unable to attend the trial.

Dr. E. F. Schumacher, who had treated many diseases of the brain, testified that he had heard the hypothetical question and would say that the prisoner was insane when he committed the deed. It was a case of irresistible insanity. He had no control over his passion.

Dr. H. K. Beatty thought James Nutt was insane at the time of the shooting. The aggravations stated in the hypothetical question led to the explosion which caused the shooting.

Dr. J. W. Kirker believed the prisoner insane at the time of the killing of Dukes. Anger, revenge, and kindred passions may dominate in a sane mind so as to take away its control, though a man's mind may be ordinarily sound. He would classify the case as one of emotional insanity.

Dr. James Christy thought Nutt was insane, but did not think it was sudden emotion. His impulse was to kill, and it grew stronger and stronger, until it expected in the killing.

Mr. Brown then addressed the court, saying that letters would now be read of a character improper for ladies to hear, and asked that they retire. After they had retired the letters that have given the Dukes-Nutt case such prominence were produced by the defense. Young Nutt's lips, as he saw the curse of his troubles, twitched nervously, and his fingers worked spasmodically. At the request of Senator Voorhees he was led from the court room, it being evident that he could not stand the reading of the documents. The letters were then read. They were the same letters which were produced at Dukes's trial. At the conclusion of the reading the doors were opened and the ladies were admitted.

Mr. Patterson then said that he thought the letters and papers of young Nutt, kept in his trunk, should be produced and read to the jury. The Judge said he could not compel the defence to produce them. Mr. Brown said the defence had no objection.

Senator Voorhees said that letters received by Mrs. Nutt from all over the country had not been introduced in the hypothetical case and were pertinent to the trial.

The Uniontown Standard, the newspaper referred to in Mrs. Nutt's testimony as containing a report of Dukes's trial and comments thereon, which James kept in his trunk, and frequently read, was produced, and the Court decided to admit in evidence such portions as such side desired to be read, after which it was to be given to the jury.

Senator Voorhees then said that the defence had closed.

In rebuttal the prosecution first called three schoolmates of James Nutt, who testified in substance that while they thought him somewhat peculiar, they did not think he ever showed any signs of insanity.

John Beatty said that Nutt would converse and harp on one subject for perhaps six months. He had talked to him frequently on the family troubles. The first was to go West, second to run a pool room, and third to run a bar.

Ewing Burchall said he had a conversation with James after his father's death, in which he spoke of wreaking vengeance upon Dukes. Witness advised him not to carry out his intentions, as he would certainly get himself into trouble. Nutt said the advice was good, and he would bear it in mind. Witness had seen some things about Nutt which convinced him that his was of unsound mind.

The court adjourned till to-morrow.

The trial will probably not be concluded before the middle of next week. It is thought that by noon to-morrow the prosecution will be through with the rebuttal testimony. In the opinion of prominent lawyers the evidence in rebuttal so far has been more favorable to the defence than the prosecution.

Mrs. Nutt is showing marked signs of loss of vitality. She sits with her face buried in her hands, with her body moving slightly backward and forward. It will take but a slight additional strain to place her beyond the power of rejoicing at her son's acquittal.

BOILER EXPLOSION IN A TANNERY.

Four Men Killed, One Missing, and Six Others Injured, One Mortally.

ROCHESTER, N. H., Jan. 18.—One of the boilers connected with the shoe manufactory and tannery of E. G. & E. Wallace blew up this afternoon, causing the death of four men and injury to several others. The machinery was run by a 120-horse-power engine, with three boilers. At noon there was some trouble with the safety valve, when the engineer, John Grimes, weighted it down with a brick and disconnected the middle boiler. At 1 P. M., when work was begun, it was found that there was not sufficient power to drive the machinery, and orders were soon given to shut down. About fifteen minutes later the disconnected boiler burst with a detonation that was heard for miles. When the debris was cleared away four bodies were discovered, and it was found that others had been severely injured. The killed and wounded are:

Killed—John Grimes, engineer, aged 40, leaves a widow and five children; Angelo Hoitt, fireman, aged 20, leaves a widow and one child; William Cleveland, engineer, aged 26, leaves a widow; Louis Depri, aged 20, leaves a widow and child.

Wounded—Joseph Lemier, aged 29, unmarried, will probably die, having been thrown 100 feet and cut by glass; Thomas Downing, aged 40, arm broken; Joseph Mathieson, aged 40, left side scalded; Frank Hurd, aged 29, hand and arm broken; William Grimes, aged 24, badly bruised about the body; Thomas Hasty and Owen Hannraty, slightly injured.

Patrick Barry, aged 29, is missing and is supposed to have been killed.

When the explosion occurred the boiler penetrated the brick wall in the rear of the leather house, passing through the base of a 90-foot chimney. The chimney fell, burying Hoitt in the ruins, from which his body was taken dead. All the bodies were badly disfigured. The tannery was partly demolished, and the buildings in the neighborhood were badly shaken. The pecuniary loss to the tannery owners will be about $5,000. It is currently reported that the boilers had been previously condemned.

THE MONTEZUMA HOTEL FIRE.

Guests Fleeing for their Lives and Losing All of their Clothing and Jewelry.

DENVER, Col., Jan. 18.—The total loss by the burning of the Montezuma Hotel at Las Vegas, N. M., yesterday, is $250,000, and the insurance a trifle over $100,000. The fire originated in the basement under the office, which contained a gasoline apparatus. Smoke was first seen bursting from the cellar, and in an instant flames appeared at the cellar entrance. At the same time smoke was discovered in the ladies' reception room on the office floor. Immediately afterward flames were seen creeping through the dining room floor. All of the fire plugs in the house were frozen, and soon everything was in a state of confusion. The guests, realizing the imminent danger, made efforts to reach their rooms to save their effects. The flames, however, spread with lightning rapidity, and nearly all were forced to flee for their lives. Col. Benton of Wisconsin sustained a sprained ankle by a fall from the veranda. The guests lost effects valued individually at from $100 to $5,000. Miss Pulion, the housekeeper, lost $600 in cash. Mrs. H. H. Carpenter of Lawrence, Kansas, lost diamonds valued at $3,000, and her wardrobe, worth $1,000. Among the persons stopping at the hotel and who lost heavily are B. Stolson and wife of Philadelphia and J. R. Bertuck and H. Foster of New York.

The hotel building was of wood, and was erected two years ago. It will be rebuilt, it is said, of stone. No lives were lost, nor was there a single person seriously injured.

EXPLOSION OF POWDER MILLS.

One Man Killed Half a Mile from the Scene—The Workmen Escape.

SCRANTON, Jan. 18.—It is thought that the terrific explosion at the works of the Consumers' Powder Mills, nine miles from this city, just before midnight last night, was caused by an incendiary. Five buildings, with their contents, were destroyed. Twenty workmen who were within a few hundred yards of the mills had a miraculous escape. L. H. Emory, who was half a mile away, was killed by a flying piece of machinery. Another man who accompanied Emory had his leg broken. Several companied Emory had his leg broken. Several cars on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western track near the powder mills were smashed. The explosion was distinctly heard in Scranton. The people of Pittsville thought the judgment day had arrived. Their windows went to pieces, their chimneys toppled over, and their closed doors gaped wide open and refused to shut again. The loss to the Consumers' Powder Company is $10,000. There were no explosives in the grist mill where the fire started, and for nearly an hour Superintendent Dakin and the workmen, at the peril of their lives, poured water on the burning building with buckets, while the sparks fell in showers about the powder house close by. When the first shock occurred the men fell on their faces and escaped injured, with the exception of Dakin, who had one of his legs badly bruised.

EXPOSING CUSTOM HOUSE FRAUDS.

Methods of Cheating Uncle Sam and Fostering Unfair Competition.

"The undervaluation of imported goods at the Custom House is paralyzing many branches of trade and manufacture," said an expert merchant appraiser yesterday. "The Custom House people have got so accustomed to it that they appear to take it for granted. We have, for instance, a duty of 50 per cent. on manufactured silk goods. American manufacturers are satisfied with it. They can compete successfully with all grades of foreign silk under such a duty. But the real duty paid, instead of being 50 per cent., is only about 20 per cent. It is no secret in the trade that certain houses can import without paying the proper duties. I do not say that the heads of the departments in the Custom House are corrupt. I do say that rich importers get their goods through without paying what they should."

"Are these undervaluations never detected?"

"Sometimes. I have known the appraiser to add 25 per cent. to the invoice valuation."

"Is not the foreign Consul supposed to examine these invoices at the place where the goods are bought, to ascertain whether the fair market rates are stated in the invoice?"

"No; the Consul's certificate is a mere statement that the invoice has been sworn to before him. He is not an expert, and does not know the value of all sorts of goods."

"But should not the experts in the Custom House detect these frauds at once?"

"They should be able to do so, but in the case of silks, for instance, they are not competent to judge. There is not a man in the Custom House capable of making what we call a schedule of a piece of silk goods; that means to give in detail the cost of each part of its manufacture. An expert can dissect the goods and tell the cost exactly. But in the Custom House they mostly judge by looking at the goods superficially. Their inability to reach any reliable judgment was shown the other day when two pieces of goods were passed at the same rate, though one of them was largely composed of cotton instead of silk. The leading importers have their agents in the Custom House all the time. It is not uncommon for them to be called upon to give expert opinions of the value of each others goods. Hence it is not strange that they should agree to help each other out.

"If one of the heads of departments suspects undervaluation, he can call in a merchant appraiser. If he wants to make only a pretense of fair dealing, he calls in an appraiser in the interest of the importer. Then there is an opportunity for fraud in the furnishing of samples. Of course, every piece of goods cannot be examined. It is sometimes possible for the sample to be worth far less than the goods from which it is presumed to be cut."

"Are not the importers supposed to know the value of their goods?"

"Yes, but many of them pretend ignorance. When charged with selling below cost, they say they are merely the consignees; that the goods are sent to them to sell, and they know nothing more about it. The foreign makers conceal the cost of their goods, and only sell through their agents who are in the business. It is a common thing for silk goods to be invoiced at a ridiculously low figure, and then raised a trifle to show a pretence of fairness, when, even at the raised price, only half of the legitimate duties are paid.

"There are men in the Custom House who are not entitled to the confidence of expert services. They know nothing about the goods they are called upon to appraise. To be sure, all these cases go to the General Appraiser for final adjustment. But many cases that do not go through all right are probably never brought to the attention of the General Appraiser."

"Do not importers sometimes complain that their goods are over valued?"

"Sometimes, but seldom. It is pretty much all the other way now."

"How would you stop these frauds?"

"I would stop them by the appointment of careful examiners and appraisers and the selection of competent and honest men. Merchant appraisers are sometimes called in who understand that their task is simply to pass some favored merchant's goods. That sort of thing ought to be stopped."

KILLED IN A SUDDEN QUARREL.

Carpenter Hardie Assaulted at his Door Responds with Knife Thrusts.

James Hardie, a carpenter, born in Alabama and 38 years old, has lived for six months in the front room on the second floor at 348 Hudson street. He had steady work at his trade. The room was furnished him by John Bohel, agent for the owner of the building. Hardie is described as an odd, unsocial man, who saved his earnings and carried them all in his pockets and spent most of his spare time alone in his room. It is not known that he had any relatives here, and he had few friends.

In the evenings a crowd of young men gather near the door of 348 Hudson street. They are at times noisy, and they frequently poked fun at Hardie as he passed. The neighbors say that on several occasions he drew a pocket knife, and warned the crowd to let him alone.

At 12½ o'clock yesterday Hardie went out of his room, after eating his dinner, and went down stairs. Several persons heard the noise of a quarrel and a scuffle at the door. Some of them ran down and reached the sidewalk in time to see George William Ammerman fall on some boards laid across the cellar steps. Hardie stood near with a pocket knife in his hand. To a policeman who came up Hardie said:

"I stabbed him. I did it in self-defence. He struck me in the face. I was going to give myself up at the station house."

Ammerman died in the drug store on the corner, ten minutes later, without having spoken. There were two stab wounds close together in his right groin. He was 32 years old, and lived at 561 Broome street. He supported his widowed mother by writing policy slips.

Hardie was handcuffed and taken to the station in his room. Three hundred dollars in bills and gold were found in his pockets. He was badly scared, but said he had acted in self-defence.

At Jefferson Market, Charles A. Neidhart of 552 Broome street and Richard H. Vermilyea of 501 Broome street, testified that they had seen Hardie and Ammerman taking at the hall door of 348 Hudson street. They saw Ammerman push or strike Hardie, and saw the latter make a movement with his right arm as if he were punching Ammerman in the body. The witnesses were not near enough to hear the talk between Hardie and Ammerman. Hardie ran into the doorway after stabbing Ammerman, and ran out of the rear of the house into an alley connecting with Charlton street. Ammerman was popularly known as Allman.

Hardie was remanded by Justice Patterson for examination to-morrow morning.

HUNGER APPEASED.

Where the Difference Between Tramps and Honest Poor Men is Detected.

"Jimmy, get the flag!"

This command was given by the landlord of a down-town restaurant, just after an able-bodied colored man had asked for a meal and been told that he could have one if he would earn it. Jimmy brought forth a banner whereon was painted the restaurant's advertisement. The colored man was told to walk with it—slowly, so slowly that everybody on the sidewalk might read it—around two or three blocks, for an hour and a half, the promise being that then he should have a good dinner.

Later in the day the reporter called, and was told that the colored man had earned his dinner and eaten it. "These applications have been constant for years past," the restaurateur said, "and I have had that advertisement carried in the streets for years. Sometimes a confirmed tramp comes along, and he invariably turns up his nose at so menial a job; and occasionally a man who really wants work rejects my offer. No longer ago than yesterday a strapping German applied. Yes, you can have a dinner if you will earn it, I said. He assented. I coaled for the banner, and told him what was wanted. 'Nein,' he said, shrugging his shoulders and walking out. This morning a little boy skilled in and asked me to buy some matches. 'Don't want them,' I said, not looking up from my books. 'Please buy some,' at length I heard him say. 'I haven't had any breakfast.' 'Well,' I replied, 'if you want something to eat go sit down and order it.' The little fellow hesitated, and again asked me to buy his matches, and again I bade him sit down and order his breakfast. 'I haven't any money,' he whimpered. 'Who said you had?' I demanded. It must have been five minutes before that boy could understand that I intended to give him a meal. He ate heartily, and, on going out, thanked me and bowed as politely as a lady could have done."

"Did you ever lose your flag?"

"Yes, a man in a dress that wasn't yet shabby nerved himself up to taking it out, one afternoon two years ago, and I didn't see it until three or four days later. I was passing the store of one of my neighbors, and he called me in, saying that a man dodged into his store and asked permission to leave it there while he stepped round the corner to see a friend. The man had carried the flag three blocks, and then his resolution had failed him."

"Many applications this winter?"

"Not more than in any other. In summer we are almost exempt. All the men who are willing to work can find plenty of work to do; then, but after the fall's work is over thousands are thrown out, who have either spent their earnings as they went or not been paid enough to leave a margin for saving. You will find this the case all over the country."

A Letter Carrier in Ludlow Street Jail.

Martin W. Cully, a letter carrier, was sentenced by Judge Benedict of the United States Court yesterday to three months' imprisonment in Ludlow street jail for non-delivery of the mails. He left his mails in a saloon on his route.

Charles Delmonico's will was offered for probate yesterday. The estate is valued at more than $1,000,000. The will is as follows:

In the name of God, amen. I, Charles O. Delmonico of the city, county, and State of New York do hereby make, publish, and declare this my last will and testament in manner following, that is to say:

First—I will and direct that all my just debts and funeral expenses be paid by my executrix and executor, hereinafter named, as soon as conveniently may be after my decease.

Second—Of all the rest, residue, and remainder of the estate, real, personal, and trust, and wherever situated, which I am now seized or possessed of, or entitled to, or which I may be seized or possessed of, or entitled to at the time of my decease, I give, devise, and bequeath one-half to my sister, Rosa Delmonico of the city of New York, to have and to hold the same to her and her heirs forever.

Third—I give, devise, and bequeath the remaining one-half of my said residuary estate to my nephews and nieces, Lorenzo D. Crist, Charles D. Crist, and Josephine O. Crist, or to the survivor or survivor of them, who may be living at the time of my decease, in equal portions, share and share alike, if more than one; to have and hold the same to my said nephews and nieces, or their survivors or survivor and their, his, or her heirs forever.

Fourth—I hereby authorize and empower my executrix and executor hereinafter named, or the survivor of them to sell the whole or any portion of my said estate at public or private sale, and for such terms as to credit or cash as he or the survivor of them may see fit to make.

Fifth—I further direct and authorize my said executrix and executor, or the survivor of them, to carry on after my decease, and for as long a period of time as they shall determine, the business of a restaurateur and wine merchant in which I am now engaged, or in which I may be engaged at the time of my decease, hereby giving and granting unto my said executrix and executor, or the survivor of them, authority to do and perform any and every act or thing whatever relating to or in any manner connected with said business, which they or the survivor of them may deem proper to be done in that behalf, as fully and completely to all intents and purposes as if they, he, or she were alone personally interested to the extent of actual ownership in the management of such business; and I will and direct that for any loss not occurring from wilful negligence or misconduct which may result from the transaction of my said business, I do not make my executrix and executor, or the survivor of them to the manner above directed, the said executrix and executor, or the survivor of them, shall in no event be held personally accountable, but that such loss, if any, shall be chargeable upon and paid out of my said residuary estate generally.

Sixth—I nominate, constitute, and appoint my said sister, Rosa Delmonico, and my said nephew, Charles D. Crist, and the survivor of them to be the executrix and executor of this my last will and testament, hereby revoking all wills heretofore made by me at any time.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal at the city of New York, the 5th day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two. CHS. DELMONICO.

The witnesses to the will are Samuel L. M. Barlow of Glencove, P. T. Barlow, 1 Madison avenue, and James Hepenstutt, Jr., of 210 West Seventeenth street.

ELI JOHNSON HEARD OF.

He Retired to a Western State After Mrs. Johnson's Verdict of Divorce.

Eli Johnson, the temperance lecturer, who disappeared from Brooklyn in October last, a few days after the successful suit of his wife Mary E. Johnson for divorce, has been found. He left the Remson House, in Remsen and Clinton streets, without a word of explanation. His trunks, containing books, clothing, private papers, and the little box filled with drugs, which he said were used in the adulteration of liquors, and which were used in illustrating his temperance lectures, were left behind. His departure was a surprise to Geo. F. Elliott, his lawyer, and the police were unable to throw any light upon the my mystery. Fears were entertained that his mind had become affected by his domestic troubles, and by the verdict. It was ascertained, yesterday, that he had gone to a Western State. Mr. Elliott said:

"I have discovered Mr. Johnson's whereabouts. He has not communicated with me, and it was evidently his intention to have the impression prevail that he had dropped out of existence. I was anxious to discover where he was, and after several weeks of hard work I have succeeded. His suit against Mr. Higley for $50,000 damages for estranging the affection of his wife is pending, but who their it will ever come to trial or not depends on Mr. Johnson himself. I cannot tell you exactly where he is, but a letter is on its way to him, and I expect an answer in a few days. My client was a much persecuted man, and fled to escape from the troubles in which he was involved. If he has only the courage to come back and face the music, he will come out all right."

Mrs. Johnson is living quietly with a married sister in Brooklyn. She has not resumed her connection with the woman's temperance organization, and is seldom seen in public. Mr. Higley is still an active member of Plymouth Church, and at the recent sale of pews he purchased an expensive sitting.

FIGHTING WITH HER MUZZLE ON.

Laura, the Terror of Tramps, Vanquishes Capt. Williams's Big Brindle.

Laura is a thorough-bred imported bitch of the bull dog variety. She is white and thin, weighs fifteen pounds, and has a blunt snout and a dying-for-a-fight look. Laura is the property of Sergeant King of Capt. Williams's precinct. The Sergeant keeps her in the country, but she was recently sent to town to be treated for sickness. She was about to be sent home again, and Sergeant King confidently left in the station, strongly muzzled and locked up in a cell.

Detective Price, yesterday afternoon, who likes dogs, thought he would let Laura out. He opened the cell door, and she walked out. There the dog scented, and fought, until Price got hold of Laura's tail and respectfully seized the brindle. After a stout pull Laura was forced to let go. The front door was opened and the brindle darted out into the snow.

Laura, while being held back, whined and tried to tear off her muzzle. She was quieted down and taken back to her cell.

"Mother hasn't been troubled with tramps since I sent Laura to her," said Sergeant King.

TRANSPLANTED QUAIL.

Stocking Suburban Farms with the Natives of Western Prairies.

Charles Reiche & Bro., bird fanciers, 55 Chatham street, advertise a lot of live quail for sale. Twelve hundred quail in wire-screened cozes, holding about 100 each, were in the store yesterday. Mr. Reiche has for several years past been shipping live quail to England, where they have been turned loose upon the grounds of landed proprietors to breed. In consequence of the growing scarcity of the quail in this section of the country he has conceived the idea of replenishing the Eastern stock from the Western prairies. The quail are easily netted or trapped, and are so hardy that the trip does not appear to affect their lively spirits in the least. Mr. Reiche began the business last winter. His customers have farms on Long Island and in New Jersey. He sold last winter 400 pairs at an average price of $1.50 a pair. On the farms they are kept in comfortable cages and fed until the spring. By that time they have become so fat that when released they are as likely to walk off as to fly. They hover around the farm house for some time, frequently mingling with the young chickens for several days, but finally their wild nature returns, and they wander off into the near-at field or wood, each pair raising through the summer and fall broods of from ten to twenty chicks.

Put on the Trail of Baron Dikosch.

John Kohfahl, lately the proprietor of a "private detective agency" at 243 Broadway, was tried in the General Sessions yesterday for swindling. He advertised for trusty young Germans to act as private detectives. David Katz, a simple-looking, short-sighted young school teacher, testified that he answered the advertisement. Kohfahl engaged him as private secretary at $3 a month, and required him to pay $200 as security.

"Security for what?" asked Judge Cowing.

"To keep his secrets," Katz replied.

"Did you keep them?" the Judge went on.

"Oh, he had no secrets," was Katz's answer. "He had no business, either."

At the end of one month Kohfahl refused to pay him and discharged him.

Franz Hohlenkamp, more verdant-looking than Katz, testified that soon after his arrival he saw Kohfahl's advertisement, paid $100 security, and was engaged as a private detective at $20 a month.

"Well, what were your duties?" Judge Cowing asked.

"He told me to look for Baron Dikosch and friend," (laughter).

"Where did he tell you to look for them?"

"All over," Hohlenkamp answered.

"Did you find the Baron?"

"Not yet, Judge—not yet."

Kohfahl was convicted.

$14,000 Added to the Pedestal Fund.

The report of the Finance Committee of the Bartholdi Pedestal Fund Art Loan Exhibition, shows that the receipts were about $29,000 and the expenses $15,000, leaving a profit of $13,717.31, which will be increased by about $1,000 the exhibition lasted four weeks, and 43,836 tickets and over 5,000 catalogues were sold. Out of 7,000 valuable articles loaned to the exhibition not one received the slightest damage.
