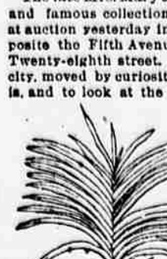
VALUABLE ORCHIDS SOLD.

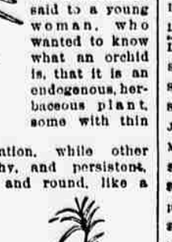
THE LATE MRS. MARY J. MORGAN'S COLLECTION AT AUCTION.

Cypripedium Morganianum Brings $750—Nearly 400 Orchids Bought by English and American Collectors at Good Prices.

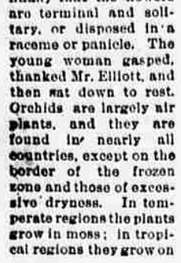
The late Mrs. Mary Jane Morgan's valuable and famous collection of orchids was offered at auction yesterday in Horticultural Hall, opposite the Fifth Avenue Theatre entrance in Twenty-eighth street. Many residents of the city, moved by curiosity to see what an orchid is, and to look at the collection, for which so many thousand dollars more was paid than the plants are really worth, wandered up and down the hall. Auctioneer William Elliott, who is a botanist, said to a young woman, who wanted to know what an orchid is, that it is an endogenous, herbaceous plant, some with thin leaves of short duration, while other leaves were thick, fleshy, and persistent, and still others long and round, like a piece of whipcord, and finally that the flowers are terminal and solitary, or disposed in a racemo or panicle. The young woman gasped, thanked Mr. Elliott, and then sat down to rest. Orchids are largely air plants, and they are found in nearly all countries, except on the border of the frozen zone and those of excessive dryness. In temperate regions the plants grow in moss; in tropical regions they grow on the branches of trees in dense and humid forests. The passion which lovers of flowers have for them is excited by the delicacy of their tinted blooms, by their grotesqueness of form, by their variety, and not a little by the dangers men have faced in dense jungles to secure rare specimens. A florist said yesterday that Mrs. Morgan's collection was the second best collection in America. Of course, the florist added, every collector believed he had the best. The florist had one.



ANGRÆCUM SESQUIPEDALE.



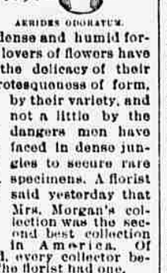
AERIDES ODORATUM.



CYPRIPEDIUM MORGANIANUM.

BARKERIA SPECTABILIS.

CATTLEYA SKINNERII.



It took four florists a week to catalogue the collection in a hot-house atmosphere resembling that of a Russian bath. The plants number 2,000. Of these nearly 400 were sold yesterday for about $7,000. Although the prices obtained were satisfactory in the total to the auctioneer, yet some of the highest-priced plants brought 150 per cent. less than Mrs. Morgan paid for them. She had bought them in England, and representatives of the same orchid dealers were on hand yesterday to carry them back to England. And they got them. There were 160 plants which were sold for over $10 each, and 65 which brought over $25.

It is not the time of year for orchids to send out blooms. Owing to a solitary bloom here and there on the long tables ladies put their heads together, while before the plant which bears the name of Mrs. Morgan—the Cypripedium Morganum—and which was displayed on the platform, ladies knelt to examine and worship. A plant worth $50, and called Catleya Skinnerii, Alba, and so small that it could be slipped into an outside coat pocket, disappeared yesterday. The force of watchmen is to be doubled to-day.

Among the orchid collectors who occupied the chairs in the body of the hall, and were almost hidden in the mass of foliage around them, were DeWitt S. Smith of Lee, Mass.; John V. Cockroft of New Haven; George Bergmann, agent for Sanders & Co., St. Albans, England; William Court agent for Veitch & Son, London, England; George Such of South Amboy, who until recently had for many years one of the finest collections of orchids in this country; William Barr of Orange, N. J.; W. S. Kimball of Rochester and his gardener, George Savage; Isaac Buchanan, Louis Menand of Flushing; William Falkner, gardener for Charles A. Dana; William Gray, gardener for Erastus Corning; William C. Wilson of Astoria, Henry Graves and William Siebrecht of this city.

The highest price obtained for a single plant was $750, paid by Veitch & Son's representative for the Cypripedium Morganianum. Messrs. Veitch & Son gave it to Mrs. Morgan. It has grown larger, and is now the finest specimen of this species in the world. It was started at $100 by Mr. Kimball of Rochester, who titled with Erastus Corning's gardener for it until it got to $500. Then the representatives of the two English firms sailed in, and tossed $50 bids back and forth until Mr. Bergmann stopped at $700, and then Mr. Court saw him $50 better and took it in. The plant itself is about a foot high. Applause followed the purchase.

Record of the English Cricketers.

The English cricket eleven will embark today on the Adriatic for home, with the exception of W. E. Roller, who will go to southern California for the benefit of his health. Yesterday they said they hoped to repeat their trip next year. The following is a record of the matches played. They have won six, lost one, and one, although it was greatly in their favor, was drawn:

THE GREAT STALLION TROT.

Pilot Knox Wins "The Spirit of the Times" Cup in Straight Heats.

BOSTON, Sept. 30.—There was some fine work done in the stallion trot for the Spirit of the Times cup at Mystic Park to-day. It was the trotting event of the season in New England, and over 7,000 persons went out to enjoy it. To the disappointment of a great many a State officer, sent by Gov. Robinson, appeared on the grounds before the trotting began and notified the pool sellers to shut up shop or submit to arrest. This stopped the public betting, but private wagers were freely laid of $100 to $60 in favor of Pilot Knox, with Montgomery second choice.

When the horses came out there was not much time lost in getting to business, and after scoring four times they got the word, all well up except Westmont. On the long stretch to the first turn it was a fight all the way for the pole, and they rounded it with Pilot Knox on the inside and Almont and King Wilkes a close second and third, the latter outside and going very fast. He speedily showed his heels to Almont, and as they passed the quarter in 35¼, he had drawn well up to Knox's wheels. When the quintet got well extended on the backstretch it began to look like a procession, for which Pilot Knox was cutting out the pace, with Wilkes clinging to him, Almont third by two lengths, and the other two hopelessly in the rear. At the half in 1:10 the two brown stallions had opened a greater distance on the rest of the field, but daylight was now visible between the pair. The two made a pretty brush down home. Murphy lifting Wilkes for all there was in him, but to no purpose, for the Maine horse led him under the wire by a length in 2:19¾.

There was less trouble in the second heat in getting off, and, with Westmont drawn, the word was given to a very even start on the second score. The heat was very much like the first. The field quickly separated into pairs, Knox and Wilkes making the first couple and Montgomery and Almont the second, with positions in the order named. At the quarter Wilkes went right up to Knox, and for the first time limped on his wheel, but the Maine stallion shook him off with ease. Murphy called on Wilkes for an effort to catch up, and Wilkes responded gamely, but to no effect. Knox went under the wire a winner by about a length in 2:20¼. In the middle of the third quarter Montgomery, then well ahead of Almont, made the first break of the trot, and fell back to the rear, but beat Almont out handily for third place.

The last heat was the most interesting. The word was given on the first attempt to a very even start. It was a procession until the backstretch was reached, and then Turner let go of Montgomery's head. He closed up the gap between him and Wilkes, and at the half they were even. Murphy had been bent on catching Knox, and had been driving in the middle of the track so that when Montgomery came up on the inside, with Knox just ahead, Turner found himself in a pocket. Then Jock let Knox going. The pair soon made the pace. Before the three-quarter pole was reached the two leaders were going at a tremendous pace, and Montgomery was at Knox's wheels. The boy held his own round the turn, and the two entered the homestretch with less than a length between them. Inch by inch the Western horse crept up, and though Knox was urged for all that was in him he would have been left behind had the distance been 30 yards longer. As it was Knox passed under the wire in 2:20, a head and neck in the lead.
