PROTECTING THE OBELISK.

A WATERPROOF COATING WHICH WILL DEFY THE ELEMENTS.

Workmen Preparing It For a Dress of Paraffine and Creosote—To Be Finished in a Fortnight—Bullet Marks Discovered.

The work of preparing the obelisk in Central Park for the waterproof coating it is to receive as a protection from the weather was begun on Tuesday. Some time ago a test was made on the north side of the plinth with the most satisfactory results. Every possible precaution has been taken by the Commissioners to avoid any risk of injuring the shaft or of applying any substance that would be merely temporary in its effects. They have finally adopted what is known as the Caffall process. The labor preliminary to the application of the protecting substance is twofold. A scaffold must be built about the obelisk, and then every loose flake of stone on the mighty shaft must be removed. The construction of the scaffold is a difficult matter, since no part of it may touch the obelisk. A fair start was made yesterday, and in three days it will be completed.

Then the fine work will begin. Eight men, two on each face of the monolith, armed with sharp steel instruments, will scan every square inch of the obelisk, and wherever a bit of the rock seems loose the knife will be used and the scale removed. By this close scrutiny every flake that has been acted on by weather or frost will be removed, and the surface will be ready for the "protector." This consists of paraffine and creosote, chemically combined by means of a third substance, in which both are soluble when heated. The compound does not evaporate, is not affected by extremes of temperature, acids, alkalies, or destructive gases, and is practically imperishable. It melts at 145°, and boils at 500°. To resist the action of the sun's rays it is necessary that the substance applied should not melt below 140°.

The inventor of the compound and of the method of application is R. M. Caffall, and to him the work of preserving the obelisk has been intrusted. When he treated the north side of the plinth he found the whole surface of the stone to be in a deplorable condition. So much so that he and his son removed over a pound in small bits from an area of a few square feet by simply picking the scales off with the thumb nail. Under the immediate supervision of Mr. Caffall the paraffine and creosote will be applied, beginning at the top and following the eight cleaners as they work downward. The method of application is to heat slowly and carefully the surface of the stone, by means of patent stoves, to the temperature of boiling water. This opens the pores of the stone. The protector, which is solid when cold, is then melted, and at the right moment is applied to the heated surface of the stone. The stone is then reheated and the process is complete.

The object of heating is to make the compound penetrate the stone. Melted paraffine will go through cast iron, Mr. Caffall says, if the metal is at the right temperature, and the way it penetrates the heated surface of the obelisk is remarkable. Fourtimes as much of the protector was absorbed on the north side of the plinth as the inventor, who has had an experience of twenty years, expected. It goes in until it reaches the cold inner rock, when it hardens. When the pores cool they contract, the applied compound sets, and the whole presents a solid, impervious, and indestructible surface.

Visitors have noticed a large crack on the east side of the monolith. The crack is as old as the obelisk. The workmen noted it as the stone lay in the quarry several thousand years ago, and, to prevent its spreading, they dovetailed in the base of the shaft across that crack a heavy piece of prepared wood. The wood is in there yet, hidden from view, and it still helps to hold the crack. Mr. Caffall will fill the crack with cement, and will also stop the space between the base of the monolith and the top of the plinth. Many other methods of preservation were carefully investigated, but Dr. R. Ogden Doremus and other experts decided that the Caffall was the best. The Commissioners have decided to have portions of the stone work on the terraces in the Park treated in the same way, to preserve the beautiful carvings that are being ruined by the action of the rain and frost.

As paraffine is a wax-like substance, some persons have a vague idea that when the obelisk is coated with it, it will look like a giant candle. This will in no way be the case. The color of the obelisk, when first cut, was darker, and the tints were more vivid than they now are after centuries of exposure. The effects of the paraffine coating will be seen only in the revived tints, and a very slight darkening of the whole stone. After the scaffold is completed it will require ten days to apply the coating. Mr. Caffall, while examining the plinth, found on the north side five marks that he thought had been made by bullets. The marks seemed very old. He scraped the surface carefully, and submitted the scrapings to a chemical analysis, which proved conclusively that the marks were made by lead.

WHERE MANY A FIVE-CENT PIECE GOES.

Mechanical Toys Set in Motion by a Coin—The Barkeepers' Bonanza.

The custom which has lately sprung up of introducing ornaments, pictures, bits of bric-à-brac, and various other things in the barrooms for the purpose of amusing customers, has now extended to mechanical toys of various sorts. Some of them are very expensive, like the elaborate machinery under a glass case in the Hoffman House, and others as intricate as the well-known music box at the Rossmore Hotel. But all of them are set in motion by the same cause—a five-cent piece. Visitors to New York barrooms have grown so accustomed to these things nowadays that whenever they see a glass case they look around for a hole into which they may drop five cents.

There is in a saloon up town a small wooden ship of inexpensive build, and rather clumsy model, covered by a glass case. In front of the ship is one of the customary little brass-bound slots. Every third or fourth man who enters the place, mechanically walks up and drops his nickel into the box. It never occurs to him before doing this that there is nothing that a little wooden ship nailed fast to a board can do, but he stands and watches the thing until some one laughs, or he himself sees that he has been duped. Then the proprietor comes forward and explains that the money collected in this way is for the support of a bartender who has been confined to a hospital for several months. The proprietor invariably offers to return the five cents, and is just as invariably refused. The disabled bartender has had all the delicacies that money could command through the cash that drops through the little brass-bound slot.

BONE AND RENDERING MILLS.

The High Death Rate where they are Allowed to Exist.

ALBANY, Oct. 28.—The State Board of Health has urged the abatement of bone boiling, fat and offal rendering, and phosphate factories on Long Island. Its bulletin for September shows that the death rate is larger where this class of nuisances abound. According to the bulletin the death rate per 1,000 was in New York city 22.73 and Brooklyn 20.20, while in New Lots it was 28.42; New Utrecht, 26.91; Flatlands, 26.85; Newtown, 31.20, and Gravesend, 20.57. The percentage of deaths under 5 years to total deaths was: New York, 44; Brooklyn, 46.3; Gravesend, 50; New Lots, 53.3; New Utrecht, 46.1; Flatlands, 28.6; Newtown, 16.1. A comparison with other neighboring towns where these nuisances do not exist shows that Oyster Bay represents 13 deaths to the 1,000, Hempstead 8, and Babylon 10.

The Exhibition at Liverpool.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 28.—Capt. R. C. Clipperton, British Commissioner for the United States, announces that the International Exhibition of Navigation, Traveling, Commerce, and Manufactures at Liverpool in May, 1886, is intended to illustrate travelling by sea, land, and air, and as allied to this subject will also be shown exhibits representative of the manufactures and commerce of the world, bearing upon the means and methods of movement from place to place. The project will also include a collection of models of vessels and ancient and modern illustrations of the modes and materials of their construction, engineering and other appliances, docks, harbors, and piers, lighting apparatus, and all things connected with traveling by water. In the department of land traveling, there will be exhibited carriages and vehicles of all sorts and conditions and of all times, and the history of steam as a motive power will be fully illustrated by models, examples, and achnical appliances for the conveyance of travelers and goods.

THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

Some Remarkable Features of the Great Meeting of Episcopalians.

NEW HAVEN, Oct. 27.—Perhaps New Haven in all her history never entertained a more remarkable or suggestive assemblage than the Church Congress which adjourned on the evening of Friday, the 23d, after a session lasting four days, holding two conferences each day. It is generally understood that this is a purely voluntary association within the Episcopal Church, with neither diocesan nor general recognition, without authority in that it can literally settle nothing outside the routine of its own procedure, and that its sole function lies in the maintenance of an untrammeled platform, where every school of thought and practice within the Episcopal Church may have explicit utterance without intimidation or dread of disciplinary measures.

This congress meets yearly. It is closely modelled on a similar association in the English Church, which has for many years attracted toward its discussions the critical interest of journalism, secular as well as ecclesiastical. At the outset the Bishops were disposed to give it the cold shoulder. Now they may be found at every session, presiding ex-officio, reading papers on allotted topics, or sharing in the more informal deliberations. Although originating in a group of especially scholarly broad churchmen like the late Dr. John Cotton Smith, and Washburn of Calvary Church, and Dr. Wildes, Dr. Harwood, and Bishop Clark of Rhode Island, it speedily became quite impersonal and authoritative in its theologic direction, and drew into its maintenance the strongest and foremost representatives of every clearly outlined movement within the Episcopal Church.

Such a shaking together of combustible and strongly antagonistic elements thirty years ago would have blown the Church to atoms; yet last week more than 20,000 auditors, it is estimated, viewed this "Happy Family" without experiencing a tremor of apprehension or scenting the ghost of a scandal in the atmosphere. In short, the rhetorics Odium Theologicum seems to have become a thing of the past, and men of the extremest convictions listened to attacks upon their darling theories without a flutter of disturbed temper or a twinge of animosity.

The city seemed to have adopted the congress in a lavish hospitality that overran all bounds, ecclesiastical and academic. Yale, in the person of her venerable President, who sat at the right of Bishop Williams, the presiding officer, was represented at almost every conference. Professors Dwight and Wright figured among the volunteer speakers, while college officers and students were sprinkled plentifully throughout the great audience. The persistent, unflinching attention of these great audiences was something magnetic and phenomenal in its intensity.

Perhaps the presence of Archdeacon Farrar and the reading of his important papers on Tuesday and Wednesday—the first, on "The Christian Doctrine of the Atonement," and the second, on "The Grounds of Church Unity"—may have had something to do in stimulating popular interest. Each Conference was given up to the discussion of a single topic, and the topics, together with writers and speakers, were assigned months ago, so that there was little loose writing and little irrelevant talk. Indeed, the spirit of the occasion was strong enough to restrain even the spontaneous after speeches, for the most part, within desirable limits. Not more than once, or possibly twice, was there an exhibition of the slightest irritability, or a call for executive intervention.

The range of topics was both fearless and admirable. On Tuesday evening the subject was "The Christian Doctrine of the Atonement," and on Wednesday, "Grounds of Christian Unity," and in the evening, "The Ethics of the Tariff Question." For Thursday, the topic was "Esthetic[illegible] of Worship" in the morning, and in the evening, "Free Churches." For Friday, "Deaconesses and Sisterhoods" in the morning, and for the evening, "Place and Methods of Bible Study in the Christian Life." There were but three disappointments during the entire congress, and the work presented was for the most part the best work of the best men. There were Bishops, clergymen, monks, and laymen in the discussion, advocates of an absolute tridentine mediævalism, high sacramentarians, low sacramentarians, almost no-sacramentarians, extremist Protestants, who fraternize with other bodies of Christians, advocates of the monastic type of Christian life and work, advocates of Christian socialism, believers in the inspiration of the Scriptures and others denying it in express terms, ritualists and anti-ritualists, followers of the old scholastic theologians and rationalists of the most pronounced type; and yet, withal, a sensible undertone of moral agreement with inner harmonies of purpose and spirit established the congruity and substantial oneness of the body beyond cavil or doubt.

The day of old parties is plainly enough dead. We are to have no more of the "Altitudinarian," "Latitudinarian," and "Platitudinarian" classifications among Episcopalians. It is to be a generation of workers, and the differentiation will lie mainly in means and methods. Henceforth the point of departure and the ultimate purposes are identical with all schools. The mere scholist and theorist will find his occupation gone. The future rivalries will lie in the line of high purposes and hard, wise work. Usefulness is no longer likely to pass as a synonyme for sanctity, nor ritual restriction for holy living. Ecclesiastical pretension must justify itself by heavy crops and shrewd husbandry or go to the wall. This much and more was gathered from a careful study of the tenth annual Church Congress.

TRADE MARK

WHEAT BAKING POWDER.

PURE and WHOLESOME.

It contains no injurious ingredients.

It leaves no deleterious substances in the bread as all pure grape cream of Tartar and Alum powders do.

It restores to the flour the highly important constituents rejected in the bran of the wheat.

It makes a better and lighter biscuit than any other baking powder.

WHAT PROF. SILLIMAN SAYS OF OUR WHEAT BAKING POWDER:

"MESSRS. MARTIN KALBFLEISCH'S SONS.

"GENTLEMEN:

"My examination of your 'Wheat Powder' develops an unexpected value in it from a SANITARY POINT OF VIEW. It certainly restores to the bread the Potassa and Magnesia Salts, which the milling removes from high grade flour, and it avoids completely the chance of disaster which attends the constant use of small doses of Rochelle Salts, such as all the tartaric acid compounds car
