JUDGE HYATT'S TWO ORDERS.

A Spirited Episode Occurred in Court After They Had Been Issued.

In the case of Newell against May, in which Edward A. Newell sued Gustave May for $350, due by a tenant for whom May was surety, Judge Hyatt, in the City Court, Chambers, yesterday granted a stay of proceedings until the 24th, when argument will be heard as to why the case should not be put back upon the calendar for another hearing.

This is the outcome of a rather remarkable complication of affairs which on Thursday last resulted in a spirited episode in the court room. Ex-Assemblyman Robert O. Livingston is attorney for the plaintiff, and says that on Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock the case came up for argument on the demurrer that had been entered by the defendant. The defendant's counsel, Mr. Louis Mathot, not appearing when the case was called, Mr. Livingston asked for judgment on default, which, he says, Judge Hyatt granted, and some time later signed an order to that effect. Mr. Livingston says that by mistake the Judge entered on his minutes "demurrer sustained; judgment for defendant," and next morning Mr. Livingston was astonished to see this entry duly appear in the Daily Register. According to affidavits put in yesterday by Mr. Livingston, he at once sent his clerk over to Judge Hyatt for an explanation, and the clerk was assured that it was an error and would be corrected. After that he was regularly served with papers by the defendant's counsel as though the judgment had been really adverse to Mr. Livingston. Then Lawyer Livingston rushed hotly over to the court.

"What does your Honor mean by this?" he said, mopping the perspiration from his brow and slamming down the two contradictory orders upon the desk.

Then his Honor spoke up in wrath.

"Don't you ever dare to present me such a paper as this," he said.

"That paper's all right," said the attorney.

"Is it?" said the Court, tearing Mr. Livingston's order into pieces and throwing the bits over the desk at the panting attorney. "Well, I say, don't you ever try it again."

Lawyer Livingston, white with anger and muttering, rushed out of the room and straightway employed Lawyer Christopher Fine to act for him. Mr. Fine took the affidavits of Mr. Livingston, Mr. Newell, the clerk, and others, and yesterday morning appeared at court and asked for the stay of proceedings, which was granted as above stated.

This, however, does not appease Lawyer Livingston, who says that, to say nothing of being put into a bad position professionally by the Judge's sharp words to him in open court, he has furthermore lost the default by which he had won the case, and has got to go the whole trial over again, and has besides lost a week's time.

Judge Hyatt said yesterday that he had understood that he was to pass judgment upon the merits of the papers without argument, and had done so. If the parties were dissatisfied, and felt that he had not given sufficient attention to the matter, he was willing to grant them the privilege of advancing their reasons for dissatisfaction, and, if they are sound, of reopening the case.

Lawyer Mathot said that he appeared a few minutes after Mr. Livingston left the court room on the day set for hearing the demurrer, and argued the case before the court. When he saw by the Register that judgment had been entered in his favor he immediately took out his order and acted upon it.

FREIGHTMEN CHASE THE WILD GOOSE.

Twenty of Them Bilmful of Business Land in Kings County Lunatic Asylum.

Contracting Agent Abrams of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway received a business-looking postal card on Wednesday inviting him to call at noon on the next day at the Kings County Hydraulic Machine Works, Kingston avenue and Winthrop street, Brooklyn, and "name the lowest rate to Omaha on 200 tons of machinery." He spent nearly all Wednesday evening figuring on the expected job. Twenty other freight agents, unknown to Mr. Abrams, were similarly engaged. They had all received postal cards requesting them to appear at the machine works to name their rates for transporting 200 tons of machinery to twenty different places on this hemisphere.

The neighborhood of Kingston avenue and Winthrop street is saved from being a wilderness by a big building that looks like a factory, and by several shanties and a small blacksmith shop. Well-dressed men hopped nimbly up the stone steps of the big building at half-hourly intervals on Thursday morning, and asked the man who responded to the jingle of the bell if the business had changed to the Kings County Hydraulic Machine Works. They were told that it was the Kings County Lunatic Asylum, and by and by the man at the door began to invite them in.

After visiting the asylum the freight agents went over to the blacksmith shop to see if the blacksmith had 200 tons of machinery concealed about his place. When the tenth man called the blacksmith ran him out of the shop. Two of the agents climbed over a fence surrounding a shanty, and stepped on a mammoth boar, half concealed in the mud. The outraged boar roused them up the floor of the shanty, which was opened by an Irish widow. She said that the only machinery about the house was used by her daughter Mary Ann to make shirts.

It was dark before all the agents, weary and mud-bespattered, got back to the city. They are anxious to find the projector of the Kings County Hydraulic Machine Works.

PUT THE CHILD IN A FURNACE.

The Desperate Efforts of Lizzie Jordan to Conceal her Misfortune.

Lizzie Jordan, a pretty Irish girl, 21 years old, was employed until Jan. 30 as a servant in the family of Simon Gruhn at 1,852 Lexington avenue.

On Jan. 29 the family went out, leaving Lizzie at home alone. When they returned they found her sick in bed, and because of certain suspicious circumstances she was sent to her brother's next day.

On last Thursday night Pauline, Mr. Gruhn's daughter, found the body of a babe in a bundle of rags in the air chamber of an old furnace in the basement of the house. The police were notified, and Lizzie was arrested. She admitted that she was the child's mother, but refused to tell who its father was. It was alive when born.

"I was afraid the family would come home," she said, and so I wrapped it in some clothes and put it away."

She was taken to the East 126th street station, where she became violently sick, and was removed to the Ninety-ninth street Hospital. When she recovers she will be tried for the murder of the child.

Mend the Paper in Bed and Left the Gas Leaking.

Caroline Hirsch, a young servant, was found dead in bed in her room on the fourth floor of the flat house at 100 East Eighty-first street yesterday morning. The gas was partly turned on, and a copy of the Staats Zeitung, which she had evidently been reading in bed, was lying opened upon the bed. The gas fixture was but high enough above the head of the bed for one lying in the bed to reach it and turn the gas off.

Mrs. Hirsch, in whose family the girl is employed, is not a relative, and dropped the name from her own name to Americanize it. She said that Miss Hirsch came from Baden, and that her father was before his death a wealthy brewer. Caroline had a good education, and was formerly a governess in a wealthy family in Lexington avenue. She was treated more as a companion than a servant in Mrs Hirsh's house. She was fond of reading in bed. It is supposed that she accidentally turned the gas on after turning it off.

The Staten Island Ferry Before 1817.

Capt. Jacob Vanderbilt, brother of the late Commodore, and one of the oldest residents of Staten Island, was examined yesterday in the Superior Court, Special Term, before Judge Ingraham, as a witness on behalf of John H. Starin, defendant in the suit brought by the city to restrain Mr. Starin and others from running a ferry from this city to Staten Island. Roscoe Conkling appeared for the defendants and Assistant Corporation Counsel Dean represented the city. Capt. Vanderbilt testified that prior to the year 1817 no one asked the city for the privilege of running a ferry from Whitehall street to Staten Island. There were no steamers on the route. Two-masted sailing vessels handled the traffic easily, but he only recollected one instance in which a horse was carried across.

The case was submitted. Judge Ingraham reserved his decision.

George Cabot Ward Declared Insane.

George Cabot Ward, formerly the senior member of the private banking house of G. C. Ward & Co., and now residing at 111 East Twenty-ninth street, has been failing in health since June last, and his wife, Fanny M. Ward, his son, Samuel G. Ward, and his daughter, Marion Ward Low, wife of A. A. Low, Jr., of Brooklyn, united in instituting lunacy proceedings. Dr. Elliott John Von Glahn and A. J. Bequier conducted the inquiry yesterday before a Sheriff's jury. Dr. William Detmold testified that Mr. Ward was suffering from general paresis. Thomas W. Ward, who has charge of Mr. Ward's property, testified that Mr. Ward had $8,750 in cash and a total income of not far from $11,000 a year, including $6,000 from a trust fund administered in Boston. The jury declared in favor of the petitioners.

Veterans Interested in Wooden Indians.

The next campfire of the Twenty-second Regiment Veteran Corps, according to a circular signed "Board of Management," will be held at 4 Union square on Tuesday evening, Feb. 23, "and will be enlivened by a presentation to one of our staff officers and a lecture for the purpose of raising a fund to send two wooden Indians to Paris to be treated for dog bite. Admission free, and no assessment guaranteed."

For Mrs. Hancock.

Contributions to the fund for the widow of Gen. Hancock: W. B. Franklin, Hartford, Conn., $150; a lady, through Mrs. Franklin, $100; Judge Charles P. Daly, $250; G. D. Rosengarten of Philadelphia, $100; and J. G. Rosengarten, $50. Total to date, $20,800.

BONANZA FOR THE LAWYERS.

Harden's Million Causes Litigation After the Widow's Death.

George Harden left a million and more in railroad securities when he died in this city fourteen years ago. He left no will, and a controversy between his widow, Elizabeth, and his blood relatives resulted in a compromise, whereby she received $125,000, the lawyers getting a large proportion of the remainder. During the litigation Mrs. Harden's first husband, named Walker, was found in a workhouse in the country, but that did not invalidate her marriage to Harden, six years having elapsed since she had seen or heard of him.

Mrs. Harden subsequently employed Dr. Moses D. Van Pelt as her medical adviser, but after two years dismissed him. In January, 1875, Dr. Van Pelt sued her upon an alleged agreement by her to pay him $4,000 a year, and claiming that $3,744 was due up to Dec. 30, 1874. A trial of the suit before Judge Sanford in the Superior Court in 1878 resulted in a disagreement of the jury. Mrs. Harden died soon after, and the action was continued against her executors. On the second trial yesterday, before Judge Freedman, the jury again disagreed, eight being for the plaintiff and four for the defendants.

DID THE PRIEST MEET BUNCO MEN?

A Clergyman from Wisconsin who Forgets How he was Robbed Here.

A little old man dressed in black, with a cut nose and bruised face, was arrested in Broadway, near Twenty-fifth street, yesterday morning. At the station house he said that he was the Rev. T. J. Quinn, a priest, of Osceola, Wis. A bundle wrapped in brown paper which he carried under his arm contained a missal, a breviary, and a clerical collar.

At Jefferson Market he said that he had come here from Osceola, intending to go to Europe. He could not explain what had happened to him, and said he had been robbed of his $150 gold watch and $130 in money. His gold chain dangled from his waistcoat pocket.

Justice Weldo believed his story, and committed him temporarily until he should recover his balance.

SWINDLERS TRY THE TELEPHONE.

Be Sure Whom You are Talking With Before You Give him all Your Money.

William Garner and Louis Davis, young men who live in the Eureka lodging house at 290 Bowery, were arrested yesterday for trying to swindle the H. L. Herbert Coal Company out of $735.25. The two men tried a new game, and came near winning. Garner's father is a foreman in the company's yard at the foot of East Twentieth street, and Garner was a clerk in the company's office at 71 Broadway until three months ago. He knew that the Albert Hotel, in Eleventh street, owed the company $735.25 for coal, and on Tuesday he went to a liquor store on Third avenue, telephoned to Cashier Frank L. Peterson of the Albert, and asked him if he had the check for that amount. Peterson answered that he had came from the company's office, and told Garner to send on the bill. Half an hour later Davis walked up to the hotel desk and presented the bill. Just then Garner rang Peterson up again and asked him:

"Has our messenger got there yet?"

This caused Peterson, and he gave Davis a check on the Bank of the Metropolis for the money. Next day Garner took the check to the Ninth National Bank, where he was known, to have it cashed. Paying Teller Charles E. Thomas thought the endorsement looked queer, and turned to compare it with the signature book. Garner took fright and walked out.

Detective O'Brien, while looking for Garner and Davis, learned that they had collected about $700 on the firm from the following people: Maine Steamship Company, Pier 36, North River; L. Rhoadbrack, foot of East Third street; F. M. Orton, Thirty-eighth street and First avenue; Consolidated Card Company, foot of West Fourteenth street, and H. B. Turner, foot of East Twenty-third street. Davis is known to the police under several aliases as "Sweety Davis" and "Peanuts." Justice Welde held them in $2,500 bail.

Funeral of Manager John Rickaby.

The funeral of John Rickaby, late manager of the Lyceum theatre, took place at the Little Church Around the Corner yesterday. The black cloth casket was placed in front of the chancel and surrounded by beautiful flowers, among which were a tall column from Helen Dauvray, a large urn from officers of the Lyceum Theatre company, and a large basket of flowers from Henry E. Dixey. Mrs. Rickaby followed the coffin into the church, supported by J. H. Robb and David Rickaby. The Rev. Dr. Houghton read the Episcopal service.

The church was filled with familiar faces. Among them were Bartley Campbell, Tony Pastor, Harry Min, Theodore Moss, Edward Gilmore, John Mackey, John McCaull, Samuel Colville, and Steele Mackaye.

The pallbearers were John Schoeffel, F. W. Pearson, H. E. Dixey, T. J. Henry, Frank George, F. De Vere, Brunson Howard, Brent Goode, and Robert Miles.

The body was taken to Montreal by the 6 o'clock train from the Grand Central Depot. Mrs. Rickaby was unable to go with it.

Mr. Allen Apologizes to Miss Walsh.

On the 6th of May, 1884, Mrs. L. H. Allen, the mother of Lawyer Augustus H. Allen, who lived at 1,534 Fourth avenue, received by mail a tin box filled with fine candies over which Paris green had been sprinkled. In conversation with reporters Mr. Allen said that he had an idea who had sent the poisoned candy, and he gave for publication a letter addressed to Miss Jane Walsh, housekeeper for his brother-in-law, J. R. Whiting. Mr. Allen was indicted for criminal libel. He has now sent Miss Walsh a written apology, saying that the reflections on her in the published letter were a great wrong to her and wholly unfounded in fact. He also apologizes for anything he said reflecting on Mr. Whiting. A nolle will be entered on the indictment.

Nellie Says It Was Only Table Beer.

Nellie McKinstry, who was arrested Thursday night for selling Policeman John J. Bates a glass of new ale in Harry Hill's, was arraigned in the Tombs yesterday. She coolly told Justice Patterson, when asked to plead to the charge, that she did not sell Bates new ale, but table beer. Bates said he asked for beer and got new ale. Nellie was held for the General Sessions for trial. Harry Hill became her bondsman.
