CATECHIZING A LOT OF ITALIANS.

Congressman Guenther Finds Plenty who have Come Over to Work Cheap.

Congressman Guenther of the committee of Congress assigned to investigate immigration began business at 10 A. M. yesterday in Castle Garden. The steamship Elysia, which sails between here and Marseilles and Naples, had arrived on Sunday night with a load of Italians, and Mr. Guenther wanted to hear the Italians catechized when they landed. The Italians entered the big building from the water side gate, and stood packed within a railed-off space. Some of the women got seats by sitting on their baggage. A passageway just wide enough to let one person through at a time leads from the railed-off paddock past another railed-off space, in which are desks for the emigration officers and interpreters. Congressman Guenther stood between the interpreter and the registration clerk. The clerk had a big book in which to register answers to questions like these:

What is your general health? Do you know where you are going? If so, where? If not, are there friends here to meet you? Have you any money? If so, how much? Do you expect to get work immediately? Have you a ticket to your destination? Who paid your passage over? Have you ever been in prison?

There were 396 immigrants, and it took four hours for them to go by the desk. The Commissioners say it is nearly six weeks since there has been such a big batch of Italians, and that all those who came yesterday were a sprucer-looking lot than has come in a long while. Nearly all of them answered the questions satisfactorily. Some had only 6, 10 or 15 francs on hand, some had no money, but said that friends were waiting for them. Some seemed to have come over on an indefinite binding contract. Wherever there was any doubt about the right to land the emigrant was detained so that Congressman Guenther might make a close inquiry. From the 396 there were twenty-seven kept out.

The twenty-seven were taken up stairs to the rooms of the Commissioners, and there Mr. Guenther examined each person. Gianni Sicca, a strong fellow, was the first questioned. He said he knew the nature of an oath, but he was scared out of half his wits when asked if he knew that violation of his oath meant ten years in the penitentiary. It apparently scared the others, too, who heard the words. However, Sicca kissed the Bible. He said he came here to get work as a laborer. His brother-in-law, Niccola Onesti of Chicago, wrote for him to come, and sent him money for his and his wife's tickets to Chicago. He expects to go to work right off on a railroad. His brother is boss of a gang. He does not know how long he will stay in this country.

Salvatore Demunda said he was a miner, bound for Tarrytown, where he had been promised work. His cousin, either there or at Sing Sing, sent for him two months ago. His family gave him passage money. He has a wife and two children in Italy, and will bring them here when he gets the money. He has fifteen francs. He has no idea what his wages will be.

Niccola Agresta said his godfather in the mines at Hazleton, Pa., had sent for him and paid his passage. He doesn't know when he will get work, but expects 80 cents or $1 a day. He made 25 cents a day in Italy, but could not save anything on it. Two or three others from his neighborhood came on the Elysia with him under the same circumstances.

Vito Ferro said his passage had been paid by his uncle, now in New York, who wrote there was work here for him. He is a common laborer and has no money. He paid 15 francs for his passport, and expects to pay his uncle 120 francs for his passage.

Prospero Donnadio was the first one who couldn't tell the name of the ship he came over on. He is 21 years old and a mason by trade. He got 25 cents a day in Italy. He paid his passage from his savings and hasn't a franc left. He expects that an uncle in this country will care for him until he can get work.

There were lots of others who told tales like these. One man said he had been in this country before and had worked in the mines at Carbondale, where there were about 100 more Italian miners. He got $1.20 a day as wages, and could save 90 cents a day, which he sent home to Italy.

Another man had been here before and had taken out his first naturalization papers. He said that at that time this country had a President. He didn't know what we had now, whether it was a King or an Emperor. Another man said he thought there was a King here.

None of the lot was clearly a contract laborer, but Congressman Guenther seemed to think that almost every one had come under some arrangement made beforehand to do work in a specified place and at a specified industry. The arrangements were made loosely and with friends and relatives, and thus could be construed only as indirect evasions of the law.

An examination of the case of Ernest Behnecke, who arrived on Saturday on the Slavonia from Stettin, with seven children and $37, has ended with a decision to send them back.

MILLIONS BESTOWED BY WILL.

How Banker Isaac N. Phelps Divided His Large Estate.

Isaac N. Phelps, the banker, left a will and three codicils, which were filed yesterday for probate. Anson Phelps Stokes, John H. Rhoades, and Frederick P. Olcott are the executors. The will is dated Dec. 21, 1866. It makes these bequests to charities:

American Bible Society, $5,000; American Home Missionary Society, $10,000; American Tract Society, $5,000; A. B. C. F. M., $10,000; American Seamen's Friend Society, Colored Home, Association for the Benefit of Colored Orphans, East River Industrial School, and the Association for the Relief of Aged and Indigent Females, each $2,000.

The testator also gives $2,000 to the Greenwood Cemetery Association, to be used in caring for his burial plot. He gives to his widow, Anna F. Phelps, $210,000, which is to be paid to her in two years; all his horses and carriages, and a like interest in $500,000.

To his daughter, Helen Louisa Stokes, the property 229 Madison avenue, with its furniture, paintings, &c., valued at $175,000, and $1,000,000 absolutely, which she is to receive at the expiration of five years. She also has a life interest in the residuary estate.

To Isaac N. P. Stokes, a grandson, a watch and chain, and to Zeno King, a nephew, $5,000 and a contingent interest in one-quarter of the residuary estate. To a stepson, Frederick W. Mallin, $10,000, and a share of the $500,000 which is given to the executors in trust for the benefit of the widow. She receives the income of this trust, and upon her death it was to be divided between the stepson and each of the children of the testator's daughter, Helen L. Stokes, equally, but by one of the codicils the testator revokes this bequest to the stepson, and also the $10,000 gift, and provides that he shall have a life interest in the trust fund. A trust of $100,000 is provided for Isaac N. P. Stokes, who is to receive the income until he becomes of age, when he is to get the principal. This grandson also has a one-tenth interest in a trust legacy of $500,000, with the other grandchildren of the testator, each of whom is to receive $50,000 when he arrives at maturity, and a separate bequest of a similar amount is also given to each. Isaac N. P. Stokes gets more than the others because he is the oldest grandchild and bears the testator's name. To Joseph Bissell Phelps, a brother of the testator, are given a life interest in a dwelling house at Madison, Conn., and also $10,000.

The residuary estate is left to the executors in trust, and out of the income the daughter, Helen Louisa Stokes, is to receive $300,000 in one year, $400,000 in three years, and $500,000 in five years. Upon her death the residue is to go to her children. By the terms of the will the executors are to receive each $20,000 for his services.

Hoboken Sundays Still Have Beer.

The side doors of nearly all the saloons in Hoboken and North Hudson were open Sunday, and a big business was done. The police made no effort to enforce the new law. The church people are very indignant about the inactivity, and either this week or next they will organize a Law and Order League, and make an effort to compel the officials to enforce the law. The leaders of the Young Men's Christian Association are behind the movement. They say that it will not cost more than $50 a week to close every saloon in that part of Hudson county on Sunday. In Jersey City the Law and Order League is doing no work at all, although the managers made great promises when the Court of Errors and Appeals sustained the constitutionality of the act. The police are trying to enforce the law, and arrests are being made every day. If the offenders cannot be punished under the new law they may be fined $25 or $50 apiece for violation of the disorderly act.

Somebody Shut Them in to Die.

Henry Wachsmann, who was employed on the fifth floor of the burned tenement at 197 Bowery, testified before Coroner Levy yesterday that he and several companions escaped through a window on the Chrystie street side of the first floor. While others were trying to get out the same way, a man who wore eyeglasses closed the iron shutters, cutting off the escape of those remaining in the building. Abraham Schneider, who kept a shoemaker's shop on the third floor, corroborated Wachsmann's story.

James Ely of the People's Theatre said that some of the employees in the tailor shops on the upper floors lost their lives trying to drag out their sewing machines.

The hearing will be continued to-day.

She Was 80 Years Old.

Catharine Meehan, 80 years old, of 216 Canal street, who was hanging out clothes yesterday, fell from the fifth floor to the yard and broke her back.

DAN LYONS'S LAST CHANCE.

If He Can't Get This Stay He Must Die on Tuesday Next.

The last effort, probably, to save Dan Lyons from the gallows came before Judge Patterson yesterday. The case came up first on an order to show cause why a stay should not be granted pending a test of the constitutionality of the law providing for a direct appeal to the Court of Appeals from the General Sessions. Return was made also to a writ of habeas corpus, granted on the allegation that the resentencing of Lyons by the Recorder, after the Court of Appeals had decided against Lyons, was null and void. The mother of Lyons was in court, and sadly listened to the legal argument. Mr. Blake, counsel for the condemned man, argued that the Recorder had no power to issue the death warrant the second time; that the Court of General Sessions had no power to deprive the prisoner before it for resentence, and that the warrant issued by the Recorder was absolutely void. He insisted that under the provisions of the Criminal Code the Court of Appeals, having passed upon the case, should have appointed a Judge to resentence Lyons.

Upon the other branch of the case, Mr. Blake said that a notice of appeal to the General Term had been filed, which operated in itself as a stay; but in order that there should be no question about it, he asked for an order staying the execution until such time as every right that a condemned man possessed should be passed upon by the highest appellate court. In addition to this, counsel insisted that although an appeal had been taken to the Court of Appeals, the prisoner never lost his right to appeal to the General Term of the Supreme Court, because no person accused of a crime can ever waive any constitutional right.

Assistant District Attorney Goff took the ground that none of the rights of the prisoner had been interfered with. Having taken advantage of direct appeal he could not now go back on it. The Court of Appeals having sent the case back to the Court of General Sessions for the resentence of the accused, there could be no question of the legality of the sentence by the Recorder. No stay could now be granted, but only a certificate of reasonable doubt that the conviction should stand, and certainly no such certificate could be granted in this case when the appellate court had upheld the conviction. Judge Patterson reserved his decision.

Should Judge Patterson grant the application for a stay, the effect will be to give Lyons several months more of life, even if the final decision should be against him.

A Bride Punishes Her Husband.

Fred Fahrencamp, a boatman, was taken to the Hudson county jail yesterday violently insane. A month ago he married a nice Hoboken girl. A few days afterward he was arrested on a warrant sworn to by Sophia Lessen, who accused him of being the author of her ruin. His bride appeared in court and secured his release by promising to take care of Miss Lessen until her child was born and to take the child and treat it as her own afterward. Fahrencamp went home. In less than a week his conscience troubled him so that he became insane. He was confined a week and then was released. He went back home and saw how well his wife was taking care of his old love and his conscience again began to prick him. He steadily became worse until it was necessary to put him in jail again. Mrs. Fahrencamp thinks that her treatment of Miss Lessen is the worst possible punishment her husband could receive. She does not fear that he is permanently insane.
