THE REV. MR. CAMP'S SUICIDE.

He Left a Note Requesting that the Water in the Well Be Not Used.

The Rev. Edward H. Camp, who killed himself at the old Camp homestead, 1,040 Broad street, Newark, on Sunday evening, had been ill for a month. On Sunday he was suffering from temporary aberration, caused by acute melancholia. He was cheerful at dinner and ate heartily. About 5 o'clock he left the house. Ten minutes later he was missed. In a short note found on his desk soon afterward he had requested that the well water in the rear of the house be not used. Suicide was at once suspected. The Rev. Dr. Frazer of the First Presbyterian Church was summoned from his home, a few doors away, and with Dr. Morton Robinson, the family physician, searched the well with poles until they were satisfied that the body was not in it. Then a visit was made to a workshop used by the late J. J. Camp, the father of the missing man. The door was locked, and while Dr. Robinson was looking for the key a servant girl crawled through a narrow opening. There was a deep cistern under the shop, and although the darkness prevented her seeing into it, yet she got the idea that the minister's body was there. The Rev. Dr. Frazer followed the girl through the small opening. He carried a lighted lamp. In a few minutes he had to be helped out and assisted to a seat. On recovering he said that he had seen a bloody razor on the ground near the cistern. While he had not seen the body of his friend, the razor and the blood on the floor convinced him that the body was in the cistern. This proved to be true, and with much difficulty it was got out. He had cut his throat before throwing himself into the cistern. Why he wrote the note requesting that the water in the well be not used is not known, but it is conjectured that when he wrote it he designed to drown himself in the well.

County Physician Hewlett decided yesterday that the clergyman had killed himself while temporarily insane. A month ago Dr. Robinson treated Mr. Camp for a severe cold and rheumatism. A few days ago innumerable pimples or blotches appeared on the patient's face. This worried him greatly. He feared his face would be pitted. He walked a great deal in his house and study, and frequently remarked that Job had no more sufferings than he had. It was evident that Mr. Camp had crawled under the house through the same opening through which the servant had crawled.

He left a private letter to his sister, with whom he had been living for some time. It was very incoherent, and spoke of the disposition of property really belonging to him and of some which he imagined belonged to him. He also left a check to pay Dr. Robinson for his services.

Mr. Camp was a Presbyterian minister, about 57 years old, of fresh complexion, smooth-shaven face, medium height, and was a bachelor. He was born in the old homestead where his body now lies. His last permanent charge was at Sag Harbor. Withdrawing from an active pastorate, he made two European trips. He received calls to several churches, but preferred to live quietly with his sister.

The funeral will take place from his residence at 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

MORAN'S FIRST NIGHT IN TOWN.

He Spends It With Some Strangers Drinking Wine and Is Robbed.

Frank B. Moran, a merchant of Savannah, made a charge of larceny against Edward Haggerty, a saloon keeper, and John Ward in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday. They made a counterchange of attempted felonious assault against Moran. Moran told Justice Patterson that he was a stranger in the city.

"Last night while walking along Seventh avenue," he said, "I met a District Messenger boy, and he piloted me into Haggerty's saloon, at the southwest corner of Seventh avenue and Thirty-third street. The boy and I drank a glass of beer. A man in the saloon treated to a bottle of wine, and invited me to join. I did so. I was then told to open a bottle also. I agreed, and gave Haggerty $3. We emptied a bottle of Piper Heidsieck. The next thing I discovered was that I had been robbed of a $5 bill. Ward was the only man near me at the time. I told Haggerty of the loss, and Ward turned on me and asked me in a threatening way if I thought he was the thief. He finally said to me:

"'I'll bet you have not $100 in your clothes.'

"I told him it was none of his business what I had. Haggerty gave Moran $5 to bet me that I did not have that amount of money. I put up $5. The stakes were held by the saloon keeper. I counted my money and found $125. I won the bet, but Haggerty refused to give me the $10—five of which I had put up. I wanted to get out of the saloon, but the men in the place would not permit me. They said I had to treat. I threw a dollar bill on the counter and told Haggerty to pay himself. Haggerty took the money and then told me to go to the devil. Before I could get out of the place I had to knock Ward down. It was 4:30 this morning when I left the saloon."

Haggerty said that Moran came to the saloon in the morning as he was opening the store and raised a disturbance. Ward said that Moran tried to stab him.

"Will you swear Ward stole the money?" Justice Patterson asked Moran.

"He was the only man near me," was the reply.

"Well, then," concluded the Judge, "step aside, and see if you can come to an agreement." They did, and Justice Patterson discharged them.

HE CAN'T HAVE BESSIE BOLISKY.

Therefore Samuel Lowenberg is Suing for $30 and the Wedding Ring.

Six months ago Samuel Lowenberg of Moserole street, Brooklyn, began to make love to pretty Bessie Bolisky, whose parents live in Wythe avenue. He was so successful that four months ago she agreed to marry him. Her parents promised not only to provide a beautiful trousseau for their daughter, but to start the young people in housekeeping and give them a snug sum in solid cash. As the day appointed for the wedding approached, Mr. Lowenberg was surprised to receive information that the bride's parents would be obliged to withdraw from their agreement, as far as the trousseau and other little matters were concerned, considering their daughter herself a sufficient treasure for any man. Mr. Lowenberg thought so too, and readily released his prospective bride's parents from their ante-nuptial contract, and furnished her brother with $30 to provide the wedding feast. But a fresh disappointment was in store for him, for when the evening came for him to claim his bride he was told that he could not have her. He has now consulted Lawyer Strauss, and will take legal proceedings to recover the $30 which he advanced for the wedding feast, and $8 which he expended on a ring. He does not fix damages for the laceration of his feelings.

Plenty of Dogs Buried in Woodlawn.

At the office of Woodlawn Cemetery, in the N. Y. C. A. building, it was said yesterday that nothing would be done about the burial of Mrs. Mary A. Bell's pet dog Cosey in the cemetery until the trustees' meeting in the first week of September. President William A. Booth is out of town and Vice-President Knevals is in Europe.

"Cosey is not the only dog that rests at Woodlawn. It was admitted by one of the officials of the cemetery that many high-toned dogs had been buried there. The official knew of at least a dozen instances where this had been done. Mrs. Frank Leslie, who has a handsome plot at Woodlawn, buried a pet dog at the foot of the grave which she will one day occupy herself.

It is reported that enterprising individuals are discussing the propriety of founding a cemetery for pet animals, which shall be finely laid out and dedicated to the remains of pets. They think that if this can be brought about Cosey Bell will not have died in vain.
