GREAT DAY FOR THE 22D.

AFTER LONG WAITING ITS ARMORY'S CORNER STONE IS LAID.

Its Fine New Building Will be Something Worth Waiting for, and Every Man on the Roll Turned Out to Help Start It.

The corner stone of the new Twenty-second Regiment armory was laid with due ceremony yesterday afternoon in the presence of the regiment and many invited and other guests. Early in the afternoon the Twenty-second's present armory on Fourteenth street was invaded by its friends, who congratulated the men on having reached the initial step in securing what they have long clamored for, an armory in keeping with the standing of the regiment. Recorder Smyth, Col. O'Byrne, Gen. Louis Fitzgerald of the First Brigade and his staff, and many others greeted Col. Camp and the other officers of the regiment. Col. Camp was a little under the weather, his leg having been injured by his horse falling upon it the day before. The guests spent an hour in chatting in Col. Camp's room before the word was given to start.

Every man in the regiment answered to roll call. The white coats had been carefully cleaned, the brass buttons and the brass trimmings of the helmets had been polished, the guns were all in good share, and every pair of shoes gleamed. It was after 3 o'clock when the bugle sounded "fall in," and ten minutes later the men were filing out through the Fifteenth street door.

Col. Camp rode at the head of his regiment, and the active men were followed by the veterans, the James Monroe Post, G. A. R., which is composed of the war veterans of the regiment, and the invited guests in five carriages. A large feature of the procession was Patrick Gilmore's band.

The line of march was down Fifteenth street to Fifth avenue, up the avenue to Fifty-seventh street, westward to the Boulevard, and thence to Sixty-seventh street, where, on the northwest corner, the new armory is to stand. A temporary platform had been erected here and soldiers and gentlemen occupied seats on it. The regiment having been disbanded, the men clambered over the stones that strew the ground around around the armory site and found seats on the piles.

Gen. Hill and Major Grant were prevented by prior engagements from being present, and Col. O'Byrne was selected to speak for both of them. The ceremonies began with prayer by the Rev. William A. Dunnell. The corner stone, a massive block of granite, lay in place. Gen. Fitzgerald put in it the box containing the articles selected by the officers of the regiment. They were:

A copy of the Constitution of the United States, a copy of the constitution of New York state, a copy of the charter of the city of New York, a history of the regiments of the National Guard of the state, a list of the officers and a copy of the by laws of the Twenty-second, a copy of the history of the regiment, an account of the centennial of the city, an account of the ceremonies attending the laying of the corner stone of the armory, coins of the United States of the issue of 1889, a copy of the latest issue, a badge of the G. A. R., a badge of James Monroe Post, a copy of an order from the Adjutant General's office, a copy of an order from brigade headquarters.

The derrick that was to hoist the covering stone afforded a good deal of amusement to the boys, because it wouldn't wheel at the word of command. The stone was finally placed in position however, after more muscle. Col. O'Byrne spoke at length of the duties of the militia and of their value, and of the past services of the Twenty-second. The ceremonies ended with a benediction delivered by Dr. Dunnell and the singing of the Doxology by all present. Then the regiment reformed and marched to the Seventy-second street station of the elevated road, where it was disbanded. The officers did not go back at once. Together with the invited guests they drove to the Mount St. Vincent Hotel, where a dinner had been provided. Among those who sat down were Gen. Fitzgerald and his staff, Recorder Smyth, C. L. O'Byrne, Alex. Col. Stewart, and all the commissioned officers of the Twenty-second.

The new armory will occupy the block included by the Boulevard, Ninth avenue, Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth streets. The architects, John P. Leo, Captain of Company I, The Boulevard front will be 225 feet and the Ninth avenue front 200 feet. The exterior will be brick, with granite trimmings, and will resemble in general style the fine armory of the Twelfth. Strong towers will stand at the corners of Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth streets and Ninth avenue. In the basement will be the largest rifle range in the city, and waiting rooms, toilet rooms, baths, and magazines. The drill room is to be on the first story, and its dimensions will be 175x225 feet. On the north side of this will be ten company locker rooms, and above these ten company parlors, each with a gallery capable of seating fifty persons. On the left of the main entrance will be the armorer's and quartermaster's departments, and on the second story, reached by a separate staircase, will be a large storage room. On the right of the main entrance will be a handsome library and officers' rooms. There will be many other rooms, each arranged for a special purpose, and numerous galleries in the wings of the building. The interior will be finished in hard wood. In the main tower which is near the centre of the building, will be a hospital. Work was begun on Jan. 30, and will probably be completed by next April.

Defied the Sheriff with a Shotgun.

FREDERICKSBURG, Va., May 30.—Deputy Sheriff McDaniel of King George county on Tuesday went with a writ of ejectment and undertook to remove Charles Peyton, a negro squatter, from a tenement belonging to Charles Marmaduke. When the Sheriff made known his errand Peyton entered the house and in a few moments returned with a double-barrelled shotgun, and levelling it at the Sheriff, forced him to leave. He followed the Sheriff some distance from the house, and when leaving him said:

"You come back here again you will get the contents of this gun."

Some time afterward the Sheriff returned with a posse, and also with another warrant for the arrest of Peyton for resisting an officer. Peyton, who saw them coming, fortified himself and defied arrest with his gun. While the officers were deliberating as to the best means to pursue, Peyton set fire to the house with his family in it. He escaped through a rear door and took to the woods while the Sheriff and his posse were rescuing the family and trying to save the building. The family was rescued, but the building and furniture were entirely destroyed. The Sheriff and his posse then left the scene. After procuring another warrant for arson against Peyton they pursued and captured him yesterday. He has been placed in the county jail.

Inter-State Drill Association Organized at Charleston.

CHARLESTON, May 30.—The Charleston Inter-State Drill Association was organized here to-night; capital stock $5,000, in shares of $10 each. The purpose is to hold in October or November a competitive infantry drill. There will be five competitions for the following prizes:

1. Inter-State drill, open to the world—First prize, $1,000; second, $500; third, $200.
2. State drill, for companies that have never competed in an inter-State drill—First prize, $500; second, $200; third, $100.
3. Squad drill, four men, open to all—$100.
4. Individual drill, open to all—$100.
5. Cadet competition, open to cadet corps throughout the United States—$50.

The Superintendent of West Point Academy will be the judge, and efforts will be made to secure the attendance here of the Marine Band at Washington. Most of the stock has already been taken, and it is more than probable that the capital stock will be doubled. Invitations will be sent to the militia of New York, Boston, New Orleans, and other cities.

Shot by an ex-Convict.

MANCHESTER, N. H., May 30.—Joseph Doucett, a farm hand employed by R. N. Whittemore, four miles south of this city, was shot last night by Eugene Collins, who has served several terms for various criminal acts. He had formerly worked for Whittemore, and had come to the house to stay over night. Whittemore and his wife were absent in the city. After supper Collins went out ostensibly to enjoy a smoke. Doucett soon followed him into the yard. Collins rose to meet him, and advancing a few feet raised his hand and fired. The ball struck Doucett full in the chest. He fell against a wood pile, recovered slightly, and was able to stagger into the house and reach his wife's bedside. Mrs. Doucett threw a wrapper over her shoulders and walked barefooted to Goffs Falls for aid. The Manchester police soon afterward arrived at the house, but Collins had disappeared. Doucett's condition is extremely critical, with the chances against recovery.

Is He the Check Passer?

Richard Davis was arraigned at Jefferson Market yesterday by Detective Sergeants Valentine and Evanhoe on the charge of passing a $200 worthless check on a silk manufacturer named Solomon at 19 and 21 Greene street. Mr. Solomon told the detectives that Davis called at his place of business last week and said he represented H. J. West Bros. & Co. of Cincinnati. He bought a bill of goods worth $300, and offered the check signed West & Co. Davis got $140 in cash, and promised the goods to be sent forthwith. Before sending the goods Solomon discovered that the check was worthless. The detectives are not sure that Davis is the man, they had him remanded until to-morrow. Davis said that it was a case of mistaken identity.

A FINANCIAL JOKE.

How Mr. Abraham Stayn was Induced to Invest $15,000 in a Monkey Farm.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 30.—There is a worthy citizen of Birmingham who is ready to throttle the man who says "speculation" to him. Some months ago Mr. Abraham Stayn, an Israelite, moved from a neighboring city to this place with the idea of making a fortune in a hurry in some of the rapid ways he had heard of. His expectations were so sanguine, and he repeated them so openly, that a combination of leading citizens was effected against him. Mr. Carlisle Mulroe, a prominent banker, to whom Stayn had spoken on the subject of investments, had promised to keep an eye open. Mr. Mulroe is a lover of fun, and is suspected of being the originator of the scheme, which was as novel as it was successful.

In accordance with a preconcerted arrangement Mr. Mulroe informed Stayn that he had discovered a good thing, but pretty much all the stock was taken, though he might squeeze him in. It was a new enterprise which had a corner in a line that would yield immense profits, and the meeting of the projectors would be held a week hence for organization. That was all Mulroe was willing to divulge. If Stayn was willing to go in with this much knowledge Mr. Mulroe might secure some of the stock for him. Stayn jumped at the proposition, and the interview ended by his giving Mulroe a check for $15,000, for which he took a receipt and he was a happy man.

Some days later Stayn received a circular letter, private and confidential, notifying him to attend a meeting of the promoters of the enterprise to which he had subscribed. On the night fixed Stayn went to the designated place, a hall which had been hired by the conspirators. The gathering embraced some of the most prominent business men of the city—merchants, bankers, railroad men, and others. The meeting was called to order and the form of electing a secretary and Committee on Credentials was carried out. The Chairman then announced that an important communication had been received from the Mobile committee setting forth the grand scheme which was now under way. This paper he then directed the Secretary to read to the meeting. The communication was heard with profound attention. The Mobile committee outlined the enterprise, which the latter stated was even then being put into execution.

This enterprise was the purchase of an island in Mobile Bay, where thousands of monkeys were to be raised annually. The letter set forth that two cargoes had already arrived. The plan involved the propagation of monkeys for use in the cotton fields of the South. The report stated that it had been conclusively proved that monkeys could be easily trained to pick cotton, and that one monkey could pick as much cotton as three negroes. In addition, it was shown the comparative cost of feeding negroes and monkeys, which there would be a tremendous saving on clothing. The report closed with a prediction that in five years all the cotton in the South would be picked by monkeys. The reading was received with grave satisfaction by the meeting, as was agreed afterwards.

The bewildered Stayn looked from one to another face and could hardly believe his senses. Finally one gentleman arose and asked some questions about the report, expressing a desire to know whether the experiment had been tested sufficiently to insure its success. This gave the timid Stayn the courage to ask a question himself, and he rose and expressed the fear that the undertaking was chimerical. The meeting, however, was overwhelmingly the other way, and voted for the immediate prosecution of the work. Stayn, growing more nervous, urged a more careful consideration. His imagination added his fears, and he excitedly asked who would train the thousands of monkeys. It was a well-known fact that Italians were the only people who could do anything with monkeys, and he predicted that the syndicate would not be able to get Italians to do this training. He also predicted that the monkeys would be continually escaping from their keepers and injuring property, thereby entailing harassing lawsuits upon the syndicate. Despite this speech the meeting resolved to prosecute the undertaking, and then adjourned.

Early the following day Stayn sought Mulroe and said he wanted to sell out. Mulroe said this could not be done right then, as all the stock had been placed, but finally agreed to give him what he had paid for the stock, and immediately gave a check for $15,000, receiving a receipt therefor. As this transaction was consummated a telegraph messenger, in pursuance of one of the details of the plot, entered with a message. It was read, and was from Mobile, stating that the price of the stock had jumped twenty points, and was still booming. Mulroe showed the telegram with great vexation, and Stayn turned pale as he begged the return of the stock, but Mulroe was obdurate, and grimly thanked the Israelite for doubling an investment for him. When the joke was revealed a few days later Stayn was nearly tormented to death. No man here dares whisper monkey farm to him now.

Swallows Desert An Old Barn For a New One.

SCRANTON, May 30.—A colony of crotch-tailed swallows built a row of mud huts this spring under the eaves of a new barn on the farm of Henry Ostrander, in Coolbaugh township. The barn was not finished until after the swallows had gone south last fall, and when the birds came back this spring they alighted on the new roof and acted in a strange way for two days. There was a row of old nests on the south side of the barn that has been standing for forty years, but the swallows, instead of beginning to patch them up, as they have done every spring since Farmer Ostrander can remember, kept away from the old barn entirely. He noticed this, and he paid close attention to the movements of the birds from that time on. There was nothing the matter with the old nests, as far as he could see, and why the swallows didn't go to work and get things ready for housekeeping he couldn't understand. For two days the birds seemed to be holding a convention on the roof of the big new barn, and the way they chirped and twittered and flew about led the farmer to conclude that they were discussing a knotty question. All this time they avoided the old row of nests, but on the morning of the third day after their arrival the bickerings ceased altogether, and every swallow flew in and began to carry sand from a puddle down the road to the eaves on the south side of the new barn. They worked like beavers for a fortnight, Farmer Ostrander said, and when they stopped they had a brand new lot of nests. That was three weeks ago, and not a swallow has gone near the old nests up to the present time. Why they deserted the old home still puzzles the jolly farmer.

END OF AN ELECTRIC LIGHT SUIT.

The U. S. Company Wants No Damages Now From Hess, Moss and Gibbens.

The suit brought by the United States Illuminating Company against the members of the Board of Electrical Control was discontinued on Wednesday last on motion of the company. This suit was for $250,000 damages, and arose out of the attempts of the Board to compel the illuminating company to put its wires in the subways. The withdrawal of the suit follows upon the transfer of the control of the company to the Westinghouse syndicate.

Mr. Paul D. Cravath, of the firm of Carter, Hughes & Cravath, 346 Broadway, said yesterday that the company under its present management desires to act in harmony with the Board of Electrical Control. He said the company wishes it understood that should any differences arise between the company and the Board it will be with the Commissioners as officials and not as individuals.

The Oldest Methodist Preacher in the State.

BUSKIRKS, N. Y., May 30.—The Rev. Cyrus Meeker, living here, is one of the oldest Methodist preachers in the State. He recently attended his sixty-fifth annual conference, in Saratoga. He is still in fair and active health, and occasionally supplies a pulpit or preaches a funeral sermon, with clear voice, ready speech, and with much acceptance to his hearers. Mr. Meeker has been married twice, and had seven children, all of whom are living.

WHAT CAN BE DONE?

There has been more excitement and greater discussion over the subject of quick consumption, pneumonia, and sudden death within the last six months than ever before in the history of the world. Doctors, chemists, scientists, and all thinking people have been interested in it, and the fact that more than two-thirds of all deaths arise from throat and lung troubles has intensified it. What to do and what to use have been the universal questions with all who have coughs or have friends who are coughing. The best thing upon the subject that we have seen is from the well known scientist, William T. Cutter, State Chemist of Connecticut. He says:

"Some years ago, while residing in Kentucky, I received a letter from a large number of the leading physicians of New York, asking, from my long residence in Kentucky, as well as my skill as a chemist, if I would furnish them with a pure article of whiskey for the sick. I did as they requested, and for several years furnished them with a whiskey as nearly suitable for their purpose as I could find in Kentucky; but neither at that time nor during the twenty years that have elapsed since then have I found a pure article of whiskey seeming to answer in every respect what they required until I chemically analyzed Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey. Having a practical as well as a chemical knowledge of the manufacture of whiskey, as conducted in Kentucky, perhaps I am a better judge of its merits than one having only a chemical knowledge. I have analyzed a great many samples of whiskey, wines, ales &c., and was surprised at the analysis of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey to find it was absolutely pure, as I never found this to be the case in any other whiskey I had examined. Its advantages to those suffering from pulmonic troubles, nervous prostration, or mental exhaustion must necessarily be very great. I consider that its absolute purity as well as scientific mode of manufacture must commend it to general use and public favor."
