JAPAN'S WOMAN LEADER.

A Fair Agitator Who Is Attacking the Customs of Centuries.

Kageama Hidde is probably the most remarkable woman in Japan. She is hardly 27 years old, of medium height, and faultless figure, and has great soulful eyes that are calculated to make all hearts of male Japs palpitate violent responses to their glances. The hearts of male Japs, however, have little interest for Kageama Hidde. She considers love and matrimony to be matters of secondary importance in her busy life, and values men above women only as more powerful instruments in the accomplishment of her one purpose, the democratizing of Japan. for Kageama Hidde is a radical of the radicals, an agitator of agitators, a kind of Japanese Louise Michel without Louise Michel's craziness and venom. She is the leader of the radical party that is shaking the aged institutions of the Mikado's empire, and from her home in Osaka superintends the organization of her followers and the spreading of the propagenda.

What do Kageama Hidde and her people wish? How do they try to induce others to wish the same? How do they intend to get what they wish? Kageama Hidde recently answered these questions with her own pretty, painted Japanese lips.

"We desire no central Government, but self-government. The organization of the party is difficult. As we may not conduct it openly, we conduct it in secrecy. Most of our people are so far behind the times that we consider it best to proceed step by step. The end of it all will be communism, or something of the kind. Of the radical movement we know nothing, because our papers are not allowed to print anything about it. Our own views, too, may not be printed here. As the law neglects to forbid the reading of our works, however, we print abroad as many papers as our limited means allow, bring them here, and distribute them among the masses. We are sorry for the Russian Nihilists. Louise Michel's name is familiar to us, but we know too little about her views to say whether we endorse them or not. Most Japanese have very antiquated ideas. Nevertheless we must labor with them if we are to revolutionize our political system, and we must move forward little by little. Thus we conducted our agitation for a parliament, the advocacy of which was once a penal offence. Now we have the parliament, we ask for more. We are forming associations or groups for the elevation of the masses and the undermining of the aristocracy. We are calling for a Government by the people, in which the lower classes will also participate. We wish equal rights for all, and we look for the supporters of this movement naturally among the working people. They must be won at any price. A small part of the Japanese people is very radical, but only a small part. I am founding schools in which women are educated practically. Our party is called the Liberty party, and our organization is known as the group system. The present system of government is bound to be upset by us, but how soon I cannot say."

Kageama Hidde is a schoolmistress by profession. She has already been punished by imprisonment for expressing her radical opinions. She is worshipped by the mass of people among whom she electioneers, not only for her kindness and eloquence, but also for her humility and simplicity of dress. Her hair is combed straight from her forehead and lies in a plain twist on the back of her head. Her underskirt is of unadorned dark silk, her overskirt is of unadorned silk of a slightly lighter shade, and the cloth on her head is unembroidered and white.

ESPERANTO.

Germany Has a New Universal Language in Lieu of Volapuk.

Associations are being organized all over Germany to hasten the introduction of a universal language called Esperanto. The agitation is conducted mostly by learned scholars who travel from town to town delivering lectures to young tradespeople, for Esperanto is to be first and foremost a language of traders and travellers.

Herr Charles Schmidt, President of the Nürnberg Esperanto Society, which is the home of the Esperanto movement in Germany, recently explained at length to a great meeting of Nürnberg tradesmen just what Esperanto was and what it would do for them and how better it was than Volapuk. His subject was this statement:

IN ENGLISH.

If an international language can be created with a vocabulary that will be at once intelligible and easy of speech for the whole world, an arbitrarily invented language like Volapük will be superfluous.

IN VOLAPUK.

Pik perfinetik pakapücom fa vel ülik pekulivöl; abu pen demik tala, sedumö volapükela. Kapücom pukl ünsam „Volapük".

IN ESPERANTO:

Se ingyre internacia estas komprenita de la tuta mondo ekzistas; sed nenia homo sur la tero ekzistuiva la volapükistoj, komprenas la artan lingvon „Volapük".

The words of Esperanto, Herr Schmidt claimed, were derived from or built after words common to all languages in general use to-day and were recognizable and intelligible for a man of any civilized nation after a few days of study. The trouble with volapük was, he said, that the inventor of it had thrown away the linguistic product of ages of history to begin the weary work all over again. A man uneducated in volapük would find a volapük letter entirely beyond his power of understanding. While an Esperanto letter could be translated faultlessly in an hour by a man who had never before seen Esperanto. Herr Schmidt closed his lecture with an offer to correspond in Esperanto with any person of any land, and he founded among the tradesmen present a correspondence club, the members of which will devote all their leisure to sending and receiving letters in Esperanto. The Nürnberg Esperanto Association has a periodical entitled La Esperantisto. The name of the language is the name of its inventor, Dr. Esperanto.
