BATTLING FOR PENNANTS.

THE NEW YORKS GIVE THE BOSTONS A CRUSHING DEFEAT.

And the Brooklyns Grind the Quakers Into the Dust—Anson's Men Turn Apparent Defeat Into Victory and Hold on to First Place—Cincinnati Pushes Pittsburgh Further Into Last Place—Brooklyn's New Second Baseman Does Well.

That was good news from Boston. It showed that Welch is not yet the back number list of pitchers, and can be relied upon to win several games for New York before the season closes. With some pitcher to relieve Rusie since in a while the New Yorks would be able to make a winning fight for the flag. It seems utterly impossible that the bad luck that has pursued the New Yorks all through the season can stick to them much longer, and with any kind of good fortune they can win the flag.

The news from Cleveland was also good for a short time, for it didn't last. The opening innings of the game there seemed to indicate that the Fort City boys were making life miserable for Anson's colts, and everybody in Cleveland, and the last tick of the ticker showed that the old man from Chicago had won a hotly contested game and was still in first place. Two out of seven points, and if Rusie is able to pitch only on Monday the New Yorks may manage to get to the top once more.

The fascinating uncertainties of baseball have been forcibly illustrated in the past few days. Harry Wright's trim young men came to New York and plunged Manhattan Isle into despair by the unfeeling way in which they clouted Ewing's players. During this trying time John Ward and his comrades were in Boston and feeling decidedly homesick, owing to a couple of artistic trouncings received at the hands of Nash and his assistants. Now the New Yorks are in Boston engaged in the pleasing task of thrashing the Bostons, and the Brooklyns are making life a hollow mockery to the Philadelphias. The race could not be more exciting. Even the Pittsburghs, who are bystanders, take a warm interest in the proceedings.

The games yesterday resulted as follows:

New York, 13; Boston, 3.
Brooklyn, 15; Philadelphia, 2.
Chicago, 15; Cleveland, 14.
Cincinnati, 1; Pittsburgh, 0.

NEW YORK, 13; BOSTON, 3.

BOSTON, July 25.—There are nine very sick men in Boston to-night. They were the Boston team on the baseball grounds this afternoon and until then they thought they knew something about the game. But they think differently now. The New Yorks are not only whipped them, but they trimmed them down in the mud until there was no semblance to baseball players. After the third inning they were not to be seen and the triumvirs began to wonder what had struck their gilt-edged team. After taking two games from Philadelphia and two more from Brooklyn the Beaneaters felt twenty feet high in anything that wore a uniform to tackling anything that wore a uniform. To-night they are laid up for repairs. They tackled the wrong team and the result was disastrous.

The New Yorks began to toy with the mighty Clarkson's curves in the very first inning, and continued to go general execution they did not spend their disagreeable tactics till the game ended. After Gore had sent a fly to Brodie, Tiernan reached first on balls, and Bassett followed the misery with a ringing single. O'Rourke followed Bassett's example, and Tiernan went home, while Bassett raced to third. Connor hit another single, and while Clarkson looked sad Bassett ran across the plate and O'Rourke got to third.

Richardson's grounder was stopped by Clarkson, who let Bennett, Nash and Clarkson played tag with O'Rourke between third and home. Connor, meanwhile, making a rush for third. Long's hit of the ball and killed two birds with one stone, as he touched Connor before he could get to third, and then, jumping over the base out O'Rourke, out, before he could get back to the base. The New Yorks had two runs and a very good start.

After retiring the Bostons in their half of the first the New Yorks started in again. Whistler opened with a hard hit single, and Clarke sent him home with a sacrifice. Welch ran to first on ball, as did also Gore and the bases were full. Tiernan's grounder forced Gore out at home, but Whistler scored on the play. Tiernan was also forced out at second, the inning ending with one run for New York.

In the third O'Rourke's fly was muffed by Stovey and Connor moved him along with a sacrifice. Richardson's three-base sent O'Rourke home. Whistler forced Richardson out but the former got to second on the play and scored on a hard wild pitch.

The Bostons got their only runs in the third. Bennett's single, Clarkson's double, Long's base on balls, Stovey's scratch hit, Brodie's single, and a wild pitch, scoring three runs. The bases were full when Ganzel went out at first, retiring the side.

In the fifth, O'Rourke's single, Connor's first on balls, Richardson's base hit, and Whistler's double yielded three runs.

In the sixth, Tiernan's base on balls, Bassett's single, Connor's hit with a pitched ball, Long's muff of Richardson's fly, and Whistler's single gave four runs.

The Bostons could do nothing with Welch's pitching after the third. The New Yorks put on one more run in the ninth, and then retired from the field, dusty, tired, and happy. The score:

BROOKLYN, 15; PHILADELPHIA, 2.

Brooklyn cranks have not this season had so much genuine enjoyment as they did yesterday. The young men who play ball for that city hustled the Philadelphia young men around at Eastern Park until the Quakers didn't know whether they were a ball team or a skirt club. The Brooklyns hitted with the utmost freedom, all sorts of pitching and fielded as though they regarded shortstopping grounders and sky-scraping flies as absolutely necessary to existence. There was 5,132 people in the park and such yelling and screaming has not been heard there in a long time. A large number of New Yorkers went across the bridge to see the conflict, and they were unable to realize that the young men in the dusty gray uniforms, who were being slapped and banged around by the Brooklyns, were the same young men who called the New Yorks to a standstill a few days previously.

The Philadelphias worked just as hard as ever, but it was Brooklyn's day to win, and it was useless for the visitors to rebel against fate. Harry Wright sat on the bench, and made wise suggestions to his attentive but slightly discouraged colts. It was of no avail. The Brooklyns continued to knock out assorted hits with reckless abandon and pile up runs till the interest in the game was flat as a flounder.

There were a good many interesting features. John Ward stopped a number of cannon-hot grounders and was loudly applauded. His play at short was superb. Darby O'Brien made a couple of sensational catches in left field and was awarded with a burst of applause. Tom Burns, with a puffed up, black and blue, but smiling countenance took his place in right field, and the crowd congratulated him on his reappearance with a two-minute shout, and John O'Brien, the new second baseman, made his bow. It was a very graceful bow, and if young O'Brien can keep up the pace he set yesterday the National League will have another phenomenal young blood.

"I've been in baseball ten years," said President Byrne, "and O'Brien is the first player I ever picked out."

Mr. Byrne made this remark previous to the game and then he concealed himself in the dressing room and waited for the explosion. The shouting supplement the President's remark by its presence in existing had taken place, and he emerged to find that his new man had hit the first ball pitched to him for a nice single. Mr. Byrne remained on deck during the rest of the game and with a rosy smile watched his find make two single, a fine sacrifice, a sacrifice hit, two assists, and no errors. With the remark that he guessed there were one or two persons on earth who knew something about young bloods as well as Uncle Anson," the Brooklyn President left the park in a beautiful state of mind. O'Brien certainly carries himself like a ball player, and looks like a young man who could wear the same size hat for twelve months in the year.

Harry Wright started the game with left-handed Esper in the box, but the Brooklyns took such liberties with his delivery that at the end of the second inning he was told to watch the game from the bench, and Thornton jumped in the breach. He likewise had a rough experience, and was very weary at the close. Ward opened the game with a single, and Foutz got first on balls. Both moved up a peg on Wm. O'Brien's out at first, and galloped home on Pinkney's double to right. Griffin made a single, and was thrown out at second. Burns struck out.

O'Brien opened the second with a single. Kinslow sent a fly to Hamilton, and Lovett struck out. Ward got first on balls, and Allen's fumble gave Foutz a life, O'Brien scoring on the error. Ward and Foutz both started to steal, when W. O'Brien hit a single, and both runners reached the plate. Pinkney died at first.

Then Thornton went into the box, and the Brooklyns didn't hit him until the sixth, when Griffin opened with a double and scored on J. O'Brien's sacrifice.

In the eighth, Thornton was slaughtered. Griffin's single, Burns's double, and singles by J. O'Brien, Kinslow, and Foutz, aided by steals, gave four runs, and in the ninth four more were scored on Shindle's high throw to first, Burns's base on balls, J. O'Brien's triple, and singles by Kinslow, Lovett, and Ward.

Thornton wore a stage smile during the progress of the cannonading, but his gay manner covered a heavy load of anguish.

It looked very much like nine hard-boiled goose eggs for the Quakers until the ninth inning, when suddenly they gathered in a couple of runs through some wild work on the part of the Brooklyns. Hamilton got first on balls and stole second. Thompson hit safely and Hamilton scurried to the plate. Delehanty and Clements retired on flies, but Myers went to first on balls. Ward stumbled as he started for Shindle's grounder, and the bases were full. Lovett hit Brown on the arm and forced in a run. The situation was becoming ticklish, when Allen sent a fly to Griffin and brought the game to an end. The score:
