MIGHT HAVE BEEN WORSE.

DEFEAT IN THE MORNING, BUT VICTORY IN THE AFTERNOON.

Chicago Gets a Severe Thrashing at Brooklyn, but Manages to Win One Game—Pittsburgh Whips Philadelphia Twice—Boston Unable to Play Owing to Rain—Anson Agrees to Play in New York Today and then Bucks Out—Other Games.

An opportunity presented itself to the New Yorks yesterday, but it was lost, and Labor Day comes but once a year. There is considerable consolation in the fact that Chicago got one of the worst thrashings on record at the hands of Brooklyn and also that New York gained one point on Anson's men. The Bostons were prevented by rain from throwing a ball yesterday. They sat still in dry places and gained a point on the New Yorks. The Pittsburghs took Harry Wright's young men by the collar and dusted their jackets twice in quick succession. This is not a good year for Garrison finishes, yet there promises to be large quantities of fun and excitement in this neighborhood before the season closes. The scores yesterday were:

(First game) Cincinnati, 8; New York 7.
(Second game) New York, 6; Cincinnati, 0.
(First game) Brooklyn, 21; Chicago, 3.
(Second game) Chicago, 9; Brooklyn, 8.
(First game) Pittsburgh, 6; Philadelphia, 3.
(Second game) Pittsburgh, 8; Philadelphia, 1.
At Boston (A. M. and P. M.)—Rain.

CINCINNATI, 8; NEW YORK, 7 (FIRST GAME).

The 1,416 persons at the Polo grounds yesterday morning had welcomed the New Yorks in a hearty manner; the sun had shone out brightly; the New Yorks had jumped in and taken a commanding lead, and the Cincinnatis were extremely downcast. Everything from a New York standpoint was as gay and blithesome as could be wished for. And just at this interesting period that tall, slender person named Reilly, who usually plays first base for Cincinnati, but who was in left field yesterday, precipitated himself into the conflict, bringing with him wholesale quantities of gloom and disaster. It all happened in the eighth inning. The New Yorks had the game by 6 to 2, and as the score board showed that the Brooklyns were endeavoring to sweep Anson and his men off the face of the earth, everybody in the Polo grounds was enjoying a broad grin. McPhee was the first man to bat in the eighth, and he hammered one to left that yielded him two bases, and then he slid around to third on a passed ball. Latham came next and hit a single that sent McPhee home. Latham stole second. He wriggled around Glasscock, who had plenty of time in which to touch the runner, but was not quick enough. Halligan's foul was caught by Clarke, but Keenan took first on balls. Holliday's long fly to O'Rourke advanced Latham to third. Keenan going to sleep on first.

At this point Reilly came to bat, and some reference to the right field foul line is now in order. The right field free seats extend over the foul line probably a dozen feet, and a red flag marks the spot where the line runs into the seats. If Reilly intentionally hooked a foul into the seats, yet on the fair side of the line, it must be set down as an underhand performance, but if it was purely accidental then Reilly is entitled to the continued respect and esteem of baseball patrons. In any event he hit the ball, and it sailed straight into the right field seats and a foot or so on the fair side of the line. All Tiernan could do was to gallop up to the seats and help easily watch the ball as it rolled under them. Meanwhile Latham, Keenan, and Reilly were making a terrible clattering that fled around the bases. Three tallies came in with terrible-like suddenness the score was tied, and those who looked upon the tragic affair arrived at the conclusion that morning games of baseball are a delusion and a snare. The fact that Smith hit an easy fly to Bassett, thus making the third man out, afforded very little satisfaction to the spectators.

The ninth and tenth innings went by without runs, but in the eleventh Glasscock's single, Clarke's sacrifice, and Rusie's base hit earned a run and aroused hopes that the game was won.

The Cincinnatis, however, were determined to have that game, and Holliday's base on balls, Reilly's single, and two bad throws to the plate by Richardson, resulted in two runs and a defeat for New York.

While the batting of the Cincinnatis was of the luckiest description imaginable, still the general work of the New Yorks was very ragged. Had they played a good game they would have won, despite John Reilly's sensational hit. The score:

NEW YORK, 6; CINCINNATI, 0—SECOND GAME.

A tall, thin man won the game for Cincinnati in the morning, and a tall, thinner man won the game for New York in the afternoon. Whenever John Ewing enters the box nowadays spectators are apt to jump to the conclusion that the men who try to hit his pitching are about to score a failure. This idea of the case proved correct yesterday afternoon. It was one of the best games Ewing has pitched this season, and the crowd of 7,209 persons who saw the game freely applauded his good work. Four scattered singles was the sum total of the Cincinnatis' efforts. At no stage of the game were the visitors dangerous.

On the other hand the New Yorks got half a dozen runs without much trouble and had a comparatively easy time of finding the delivery of Ed Crane. The latter appears to have too much flesh for an ideal pitcher. In this respect he is very unlike John Ewing. Crane was rather wild. He gave seven bases on balls, three of which resulted in runs.

In the first inning Crane sent Gore to first on called balls, and sacrifices by Bassett and Tiernan advanced the runner to third. Connor hit a fly that dropped to the ground by reason of bad judgment on Latham's part, and Gore scored. Connor stole second, aided by a passed ball, and scored on O'Rourke's fine single to left. The latter tried to stretch the hit into a double, and was thrown out. Richardson scored a run in the second inning on a single, Glasscock's sacrifice, and Ewing's base hit. In the fourth O'Rourke and Glasscock were each sent to first on called balls, and were moved along a base on a sacrifice. Then Clarke lined out a nice single to right, sending in two more runs. The final run was scored in the eighth on Tiernan's bunt, Crane's poor throw to first, and O'Rourke's sacrifice fly.

Realizing that his team could not win, Latham concluded something must be done to give the spectators the worth of their money, so he worked off some of the business he expects to introduce when he joins a minstrel troupe next winter. He placed his cap between his feet and invited Conner to hit it with the ball, and indulged in a lot of other nonsensical but harmless "freaks." The crowd laughed good-naturedly. The score:

BROOKLYN, 21; CHICAGO, 3—FIRST GAME.

Although yesterday was a holiday, yet Adrian C. Anson of the Windy City did not find his cup filled to overflowing with enjoyment in common with the thousands of friends of the holiday. To put it mildly, he lost his equilibrium. In fact, he was angry; yes, angry clean through and through and from top to bottom and bottom to top. Never in his days had he experienced what he did yesterday morning.

When he retired to his little room at the hotel in Brooklyn Sunday night he told the clerk to have him called at 9 o'clock sharp, and, as an extra inducement, gave the clerk a silver coin. This may cause surprise, so utterly uncharacteristic is it of Anson, but the fact is, he had both games won from the Brooklyns, and he felt that all that was necessary for him to do was to walk into the field and claim them.

When the porter knocked on the door in the morning he jumped up and began to dress. He looked at his watch. Horrors! It was ten o'clock and the game would be called in half an hour. He could not get there in time if it was possible to be shot through an electric tunnel. He was beside himself with rage. Down stairs he went and there he gave vent to language that was very forcible.

Anson rushed away at once for Eastern Park. Meanwhile the time for starting the game had come and no "Anse" appeared. Somebody suggested that he must have been killed somewhere, as he was never known to do such a thing before without letting some of the players know about it. In fact, it was the first time this season that he had failed to be on hand.

Not a Chicago player thought to bring along even a single bat, leaving it all for "Anse" to do. The whole team, while waiting for their leader to appear, was like a brood of chickens without their mother, all at sea. Finally it came time for the game to start, and they had to go on and play. Merritt went to first base.

When the team made its appearance everybody asked for "Anse" and then was disappointed when the game began without him.

An hour afterward, a big, stalwart fellow was seen to tumbledere flying down the elevated stairs, and with his coat tails out straight made for the entrance to the grounds. He rushed up to the gate, and in almost breathless excitement addressed the attendant, who had suddenly recognized the questioner.

"What's the score, old man? Tell me quick," he yelled, as his heart stopped beating for an instant.

"I kind o' reckon that those 'ar kids of yourn is getting the stuffing knocked outer 'em. The score is 16 to 0 in favor of the Brookies. See, pass 'em."

"You don't say!" exclaimed the Old Man, for it was none other but the head and front of the Chicago team. "My gawd, to think I was caught in this way!" and at that he rushed to the other side of the grand stand and walked on to the field. There was great applause.

But when he saw Ryan pitching, Hutchinson in the field, Shriver on first base, and Vickery at short he was inclined to laugh. "Got darn that porter," he said afterward. "He got me into all this trouble. I can't fine myself. I suppose I'll have to put a hundred on the hotel people."

There is not much to say of the game. The Brooklyns walked away with it, in nearly every inning the Chicagos changed the positions of some of their men. The principle feature was the good-natured way in which the Brooklyns allowed the visitors to use their bats. Had the Brooklyns been in the same dilemma in Chicago they would never have been allowed to use the Chicago team's bats. There is a difference in teams, as everybody knows. The score:

CHICAGO, 9; BROOKLYN, 8 (SECOND GAME).

Schriver, whom the Philadelphias released, did it all with a home run in the eighth inning. When he came to the bat in the second inning he received a beautiful floral horse-shoe. Anson took it for him and set it up beside the bench for good luck. The more Schriver looked at it the more he became determined to do something to appreciate the kindness of his friends, so in the fourth inning he knocked out a three-bagger and a second later scored, putting the Chicagos in the lead. When he came to the bat in the eighth inning there were two men on bases. Then he forthwith notified himself on the spot and hammered the ball so far over Griffin's head that the two men on bases came home, tying the score, and he scored himself and won the game for the Chicagos.

It was Brooklyn's luck. Lovett was hit hard, but the fielders made some remarkable catches. The home team kept pegging away, tying the score twice, and finally taking the lead in the seventh inning. Everybody then supposed that they had the game won.

Tom Daly caught in superb style and Ely did some clever sacrifice hitting. The Chicagos showed what a team they are with Anson. The score:
