

Messrs.

Ignatius May C.	Charles Henratty, P.
James Gaddo, 2nd B.	Bernard Duffy, S. S.
John Davis, L. F.	Burke Glaiser, Sub-
Mascots—Thomas Kelly and Samuel Roberts.

This team returned the visits of the Asher and Maud Clubs—when far distant from the College we were pre-admonished that they were the victors, by the blowing of horns, and triumphant shouts which rent the air. Arrangements are being made for the formation of a Foot-Ball Squad.

The College Orchestra bids fair to surpass that of former years, both in the number of its members, and in its masterly rendition of the pieces being at present rehearsed.

Autumn.

EACH season has its own peculiar, fascinating charms, and hence, it is not surprising that we all have our choice season, which may be fondly called our pet one. But, for my part, give me beauteous Autumn with all its combined excellencies and advantages. For although Nature assumes a dreary aspect and the sweet songsters are not in full chorus, yet, never are the rays of the sun more mellow or the sky more richly spangled with twinkling stars than in Autumn; and never does "Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep," more invitingly beckon us to cool and refreshing slumber.

This beautiful season with all its grandeur is now upon us. The falling leaves are tossed about in swirling masses hither and thither; the far-away hills are tinted with brown, red, and gold, finely blended by the artistic touch of Nature, with only here and there a remnant of the soft green verdure of a month before.

To us college boys especially, Autumn affords opportunities for pleasures which could not be enjoyably indulged in during other periods of the year. Many athletic sports there are, such as football, basket ball and other games, which are the source of merriment and wholesome and healthy recreation. It is also the time for hunting, nut-gathering and other sources of pleasure, all of which are but too well known and freely resorted to by the junior members of nearly every family.