BEATEN BY BALTIMORE.

FIRST DEFEAT FOR NEW YORK IN A CHAMPIONSHIP GAME.

Anson Plays Two Games at Cincinnati and Loses Both—Washington Gives Brooklyn a Tumble, and Philadelphia Thrashes Boston—Louisville Beats Pittsburgh.

There has been a great deal of sympathy in this city for Baltimore. The Orioles, as they call Van Haltren and his men in that city, were getting knocked down every game, and there was a sincere desire to see them brace up and win a ball. There was, however, no burning desire to have the Orioles break the spell of defeat at the expense of New York, and the vigor with which the pride of Gotham was trampled into the dust yesterday somewhat interferes with the flow of sympathy from the metropolis in the direction of Baltimore. However, that little slip will be overlooked, and especially in view of the results at other points. Uncle Anson tried the new rule which compels the playing of postponed games during the series in which the postponement occurs, and the rule worked only one way—to the disadvantage of Uncle Anson. Comiskey, who appears to have infused new life into the Reds, downed the Chicago's in two close and exciting games. Then another surprise was the neat way in which the Quakers trimmed the Boston champions. Louisville turned down Pittsburgh in a masterly manner. After battering the Philadelphians on Monday, Ward and his warriors went over to Washington to play with the capital city team. The Washingtons have, like the Baltimores, been threatening to win a game for some days past, and they did it yesterday. The Brooklyns struggled hard, but they were compelled to take their medicine. St. Louis and Cleveland were down to play two games, but rain knocked them out.

The games yesterday resulted as follows:

Baltimore, 9; New York, 4.
Philadelphia, 5; Boston, 2.
Cincinnati, 5; Chicago, 2 (1st game).
Cincinnati, 3; Chicago, 0 (2d game).
Louisville, 2; Pittsburgh, 1.
Washington, 7; Brooklyn, 6.

BALTIMORE, 9; NEW YORK, 4.

BALTIMORE, April 17.—Inside is responsible for New York's fall from grace to-day. He lacked none of his usual speed, for the ball came in as if propelled from a cannon, but he was unable to get the base near the rubber. Had it been possible to get the ball to the plate, and thought of the game, the score would undoubtedly have been even larger. As it was, the rocky pitcher was charged with two passed balls, which cost him dearly, if not the rules of the game, two wild throws were caused by his errors, and he allowed the visitors three to home and scored three outs the game, and three more outs in succession, and twice two outs consecutively, and twice they went for home. They came as a rule, when they did do good. Long Jim Fogarty, who had caught the Giants to strike the town on a day when the home team was feeling good and ready to play ball for all there was in it. Not a feeding or a marred the Orioles' record. They gave the finest exhibition of team work and all-around ball playing seen here this season. Long Jim Fogarty, who had allowed at least two bases were captured by the outfielders in great style, and some phenomenal catches were made. Bases were particularly unfortunate in this respect. In the second inning he drove a fine ball to right field with Van Haltren caught on the run, and again in the sixth Wright drove a fine ball to left field. The New Yorks were also unfortunate in their base running. They were repeatedly nipped both when trying to gain a lag on a sacrifice and when trying to steal.

Robinson did some remarkable work in holding them close, four times did he catch runners at second, twice the ball caught them at the base when the runner was within five feet from the bag. No one decision in this respect was questionable. The only man to steal his base was Ewing, and he had a mighty close call, having been compelled to make a long slide. McMahon's pitching and general field work was the feature of the game. He put out only two men and sent two to first on balls. He also assisted in putting out eight men on short hit balls, some of which bounded very ugly and required fine judgment to capture. He was splendidly supported in the field, while the outs show that the outfielders did their share of the work.

Wood made his first appearance to-day, and created a favorable impression. Ewing worked like a beaver to pull the game out of the fire, and did, next to Boyle, the best work in the field. The batting honors, however, fairly belong to Fields, who never more supplied the vacancy left by Tiernan in the right guard. He made a hit every time he went to the bat, one of his hits being a three-bagger. Singularly enough, he failed to profit by his slugging, and only once did he advance a runner. It was truly a case of hard luck. O'Rourke's hits, and he made two good ones, were valuable. They assisted in bringing in two of the three runs made.

In the first inning both teams drew blanks. Welch, who led off for the Orioles, was an easy victim at first, and Van Haltren was quickly thrown out by Fuller. Wood then dropped to the plate and rapped out a single, but was left to die, Whistler striking out. Then the New Yorks started in with a will. Gore lifted the second ball, pitched for two bases. Ewing attempted to sacrifice, but the ball rolled to McMahon, who fired it at third and caught Gore, who was running to third. While Boyle was at the bat Ewing started to steal home, but was caught very easily, Boyle then made a hit, but was left on O'Rourke's easy one to the pitcher.

The second inning was more fruitful for Baltimore. Pickett led off with a great drive over Gore's head for three bases, and, after Shindle had flied out, Welch made a fine hard single. Robinson followed with a hard one at Bassett, which that player juggled, and both runners were safe. It looked promising for Baltimore, but McMahon struck out and Welch flied out to Ewing. The visitors then went in to knock the cover off the ball. Joyce lifted a high one to Wood, which was readily turned, and Bassett drove a line fly to Van Haltren, which was also accepted. Withycombe, Fields hit for one base and Rusie followed with a beauty for two bases along the third base line. Shorty Fuller left them there by hitting a liner to Robinson.

Baltimore increased the lead in the third inning. After Van Haltren had been thrown out at first by Bassett, Boyle dropped Wood's third strike and threw wild to Ewing, allowing the runner to reach his base. Whistler followed this up with a hit, sending Wood to third. Whistler then stole second, and both scored on Pickett's drive to left field. But the New Yorks were unable to score. Gore reached first on a passed ball, and was thrown out at second, and the next two men went to sleep.

After two hands were out in the fourth, Rusie sent two men to bases on balls, but they got no further. It was in this inning that the visitors began work. O'Rourke led off with a double, and was advanced by Lyons's sacrifice and scored on Bassett's hit. Fields's single sent Bassett along, and Rusie's brought him home. Fields, who was playing off second at this time, did not dream of danger until it struck home, to whom the ball had been thrown from right field, fired it at home, and Jordan was touched out. Fuller was an easy victim at first, and two runs was the total scored.

In the fifth a pretty double play by O'Rourke and Fuller prevented the Baltimores from scoring, while the visitors added one to their total. Gore got his base on balls, was forced at second by Ewing, and the latter scored on Boyle's sacrifice and O'Rourke's triple. There was no run getting in the sixth, but in the seventh Baltimore began making them in pairs. After two hands were out Whistler hit for a double and Pickett got his base on balls. Robinson's hit over the head of Shindle's grounder Whistler scored, and in trying to catch Shindle, who was stealing second, Rusie threw wide and Pickett scored. Baltimore made two more in the eighth on three successive bases on balls and Whistler's single, which scored McMahon and Welch. Van Haltren, who tried to make a third out on the ball, was thrown out by O'Rourke. In this inning the New Yorks made their last run. Boyle led off with a triple and scored on O'Rourke's sacrifice to right field. The Orioles clinched their victory in the ninth. Pickett made a hit and Shindle was hit by a pitched ball. A wild pitch advanced them a base and they scored on Shoch's single. The score:

WASHINGTON, 7; BROOKLYN, 6.

WASHINGTON, April 19.—It was Washington's turn to win a game to-day, and despite the fact that they were pitted against Johnny Ward's wonders. The latter played the Washingtons, but were not so lucky in getting hits together when needed. De Wolf Hopper, president in a new black tile, towered above all the other spectators in the grand stand, and "rooted" in his usual vigorous manner for Ward, but it was of no avail. Somebody crossed his conjure with another rabbit's foot, and suspicion points to Senator Hill, who squeezed until he became black in the face for his colleague, Danny Richardson. There were other distinguished persons on hand to share in the general enthusiasm. Among them were Marshal Bansdell, representing the Presidential house; Col. John T. Deveny, as a proxy for Vice-President Morton; President Young of the League, John J. O'Neill of Missouri, Lieut. Vesy, U. S. N.; Butler Mahone of Virginia, Dr. Stone, Charley Fowler of New York, the Hon. A. F. Cubits, and Mr. and Mrs. Valentine of Nebraska. Every club visiting Washington thus far this season seems to have a popular star, and John M. Ward, Daniel Brouthers, Kinslow, and Corcoran formed a quartet of twinklers to-day whom the bleachers most delighted to honor. Kinslow was presented with a handsome diamond horseshoe scarfpin.

Washington began run-getting in the first inning, Hoy being sent to first on called balls, while two steals in succession and a single by Larkin sent him across the plate. Both sides drew blanks in the succeeding turns at the bat, but in the third inning Dan Richardson set the crowd yelling with a single to right, followed by a home run drive later on a double-bagger to left by Larkin. Brooklyn also scored in the third, Corcoran starting in with a double over Hoy's head. Kinslow sacrificed, and Pitcher Hart scored his comrade on a clean drive to right.

No further runs were in order until the sixth inning, when Brooklyn jumped into the lead, and it looked as though the game had been pulled out of the fire. Brouthers put a little sand on his hands, and smote the ball hard on a line between centre and right field. Burns fee out to Dowd. Griffin came to the rescue with a lofty single. Corcoran duplicated his hit of the third inning, but this time it was a triple, and two runners ahead of him came home. Kinslow's high fly to left scored Corcoran, and the figures were four to two when the seventh inning was inaugurated.

In this instance it was lucky enough for Washington, five runs being added to their score. Hoy led off with a single. Then Danny Richardson made Senator Hill's eyes gleam with gladness as he poked a two-baser down the left field line, scoring Hoy. Larkin took first on called balls, and Hardie Richardson sacrificed in good shape. Milligan filled the bases by taking first on four balls. A single by Duffee, supplemented by Dowd's double, ran the figures up to seven against four in favor of the local team.

Capt. Ward at this juncture took Hart out of the box, substituting Stein. The wisdom of the change was demonstrated. In the last inning Collins and Wright each singled, and Joyce drove both home with a double. The latter was subsequently thrown out at third in a daring attempt to pilfer that base in conjunction with Brouthers, who had walked to first on balls. Hir Jim then stole third, while Burns was allowed to go to first. The fifth, however, stopped the game, Griffin striking out. Score:

PHILADELPHIA, 5; BOSTON, 2.

PHILADELPHIA, April 19.—Keefe's pitching was too much for the Boston club to-day. For five innings the visitors did not make a hit, and only in the eighth inning did they make a run. In that inning, when a base on balls, Quinn's single, and Clarkson's two-bagger drove the right field foul line, brought in two runs. Hallman made the star play of the game, but Allen, McCarthy, and Wood played brilliant works. Attendance, 2,000. The score:

CINCINNATI, 5; CHICAGO, 2—FIRST GAME.

CINCINNATI, April 19.—Cincinnati has gone baseball crazy. Five thousand two hundred and four cranks turned out and saw Capt. Comiskey's Reds wallop Uncle Anson's colts in two exciting contests. In the first game the great crowd was kept in a state of suspense until the eighth inning, when Holliday clinched the victory by a drive over Wilmot's head for the circuit, Halligan scoring ahead of him. LOUISVILLE, 2; PITTSBURGH, 1.

LOUISVILLE, April 19.—Pittsburgh did hard, it played the game until the last man was out. Pitcher Jones once more with the Pittsburgh club. He has lost some of his old time speed, but he showed plenty of the old cunning and skill. Mr. Capt. Pfeiffer would not take the chance. To-day, however, it was decided to give him an opportunity, and the smoky City team knows the result. The score:

Baseball Notes.

CAMBRIDGE, April 19.—The Harvard nine beat the Boston Unions to-day by 10 to 7.

Edwin F. Bligh, the well-known and popular catcher, died at the residence of his mother, 132 Eleventh street, Troy, on Monday, of peritonitis. He was born in Brooklyn twenty-eight years ago. The deceased commenced his career as a player with the old Nassaus of South Brooklyn. In 1886 Manager Barnie of the Baltimore Club took a liking to him and gave him an engagement. In 1887 he played in Lawrence, Mass.; in 1888, with New Orleans and Cincinnati. In 1889 and '90 Bligh caught for the Columbus team.
