Years ago, when the biggest part of our business was wholesale, we wanted to make our clothing better; but the average clothier wouldn't pay for first-class work. He could "do more business with inferior goods at lower prices."

But we made up our minds to make the best clothing in the world, and began to pay more for cloth, making, and trimming. This virtually threw over the general wholesale trade.

Result: our retail business is big, and growing; because it's good—solid all the way through. Our clothing is better in every way than the wholesaler dares produce.

We now sell at wholesale only to a few clothiers in the large cities whose customers appreciate the best things.
