PITTSBURGHS WIN FAIRLY,

BUT THERE'S ALMOST A RIOT AMONG THE RIVAL PLAYERS.

Police Have to Interfere—Doyle Ordered from the Game, and Umpire Murray Almost Mobbed—Fifteen Thousand Persons See the New Yorks Lose a Most Exciting Battle—Brooklyns Beat the Chicagos—Boston, Cleveland, Baltimore, and Washington Win the Other Contests.

The New Yorks were fairly outplayed yesterday by the Pittsburghs, and lost a game that was replete with exciting incidents. The Brooklyns took a game from Chicago which enabled the Bostons, who beat the Louisvilles, to take possession of second place. Cleveland defeated Philadelphia in the tenth inning, and the Baltimores almost shut the Cincinnatis out. Washington outplayed St. Louis. The results:

Pittsburgh, 7; New York, 4.
Brooklyn, 9; Chicago, 6.
Boston, 17; Louisville, 3.
Cleveland, 8; Philadelphia, 7.
Baltimore, 7; Cincinnati, 1.
Washington, 14; St. Louis, 6.

PITTSBURGH, 7; NEW YORK, 4.

Fifteen thousand persons saw a game of ball yesterday at the Polo grounds that will never be forgotten. It was replete with the most exciting incidents, and on the whole did not reflect much credit upon the participants. It is seldom that the police are compelled to separate players who want to fight upon the field, especially in this city, but the bluecoats had to assert their authority yesterday in order to prevent a rough-and-tumble encounter. Then, when the game was over, Acting Captain Kirchner had to escort Umpire Murray to his dressing room, while 5,000 angry men followed ready to hustle the unfortunate official.

The trouble started in the third inning, and Umpire Murray was clearly to blame. Beckley, Stenzel, and Smith occupied the bases, with nobody out. The score was 4 to 0 in Pittsburgh's favor, and the crowd was inanything but good humor. Bierbauer hit sharply to Fuller who threw Beckley out at the plate. Wilson shot the ball to Davis, retiring Bierbauer, and Davis got the sphere back to Wilson in time to nail Stenzel. Stenzel didn't seem to touch the plate, and was pinned down by Wilson. It looked like a magnificent triple play, and the tremendous yell that went up showed that everybody believed it was one. But Umpire Murray shook his head, declaring that only two men were out and that the run counted. When the crowd realized this the indignation knew no bounds. Capt. Doyle came in to kick and kept it up so incessantly that Murray pulled out his watch and told him to play ball. Still Doyle argued with him and was finally ordered out of the game.

It seemed as if the people would climb out of the stands and attack Murray then and there, so great was their anger. Some of the more hot-headed spectators threatened to do him bodily harm. But Murray remained calm and continued to umpire in spite of the howling and hooting that continued for the next two innings. That his work was poor was self-evident, but the claim could not be made that he robbed the New Yorks of the game. He simply gave both sides a rough deal, but the Pittsburghs won because they played better ball than the local men.

Just as if the trouble caused by Murray was not enough, the players themselves got mixed up in a tangle during the fifth inning. Farrell, Wilson, and Ruslie were on the bases, when Fuller sent a high fly to short centre. Bierbauer ran out and muffed the ball, and Stenzel threw it away over Sugden's head. Farrell scored on this error, and Wilson came racing on to the plate, too. Sugden ran to the back stop and threw the ball to Killen at the plate to stop Wilson. The latter slid, and in doing so spiked Killen on the shin. The Pittsburgh pitcher had muffed the ball, and in a fit of temper kicked Wilson viciously on the hip. Wilson leaped to his feet and squared off just as Killen aimed a good right hander at him. In an instant the players of both teams rushed to the plate. Hawley, who was not in the game, ran up with a bat, and Stenzel tried to knock Burke down. Van Haltren dashed at Killen and Farrell hurried over to Hawley. Dad Clarke stood close to Sugden and blows seemed imminent. Just at this pot Acting Police Captain Kirchner ran out to see what the players were and ordered them to sit down. Doyle also grabbed Clarke and Wilson and pulled them away. Manager Mack, too, was quick to interfere with his men, and the players slowly retreated to their respective benches, their eyes blazing and their fists swinging wildly. It was a narrow escape from a free fight, and the crowd fully appreciated the fact.

The Pittsburghs were solely to blame for the row. Their tactics throughout the afternoon deserved the harsh comments that came from the spectators. Beckley repeatedly refused to throw base runners over, Smith attempted once to knock Farrell down, and Sugden indulged in all sorts of infamous tricks at the plate.

Somebody blundered when Amos Rusie was put into the box. The big fellow pitched a hard game on Thursday against Cincinnati and was entitled to a rest. He has been worked altogether too much for so early in the season, and should be saved a bit. It was Clarke's turn to pitch on Friday, but it was announced that Rusie would be put in so that Clarke could be saved for yesterday's game. Dad's name was on the score card to pitch, but at the last moment Rusie was asked to officiate. That Amos was not in the best shape to pitch his usually wonderful game was evident from the start. He did not have much speed at times and kept Wilson constantly on the jump. The Pittsburghs hit him quite hard and with good judgment, so that, although there were a number of fielding errors behind him, they could not be regarded as responsible for the defeat. Rusie simply pitched out of his turn and was found wanting.

It appears to be a habit of the New Yorks when a great crowd visits the Polo grounds to play baseball of the poorest kind. In the field yesterday they were simply like a lot of minor leaguers, while at the bat they displayed about as much skill and judgment as the famous Casey did. With hardly an exception they allowed good balls to sail across the plate without striking at them, and then reached for bad ones. On the bases there was absolutely no ginger, and when the Pittsburghs scored four runs in the fifth inning Doyle's men seemed to act as if it was all over. The Pittsburghs, on the contrary, played a game that was full of life. They picked out good balls and hammered them for keeps. They ran bases with rare ability, and many of their fielding plays were phenomenal.

Killen, the left-hander, started to pitch for the visitors, and during the first four innings the New Yorks were dummies. Rusie, on the other hand, began poorly. He sent Donovan to first base on balls, and Patey ran all the way to third on Wilson's wide throw to second. Clingman then rapped a single to centre, bringing in the run, and took second on another safe drive by Beckley. Stenzel's sacrifice moved both men along, and they scored on Smith's two-bagger to left. The manager who said Eddie Burke couldn't throw must have been in error, for Eddie picked up the ball close to the foul line and hurled it almost into the right field seats, an error that made it easy for Smith to keep right on to the plate with the fourth run. In the third Stenzel scored as already described, and when the chart opened the figures stood 5 to 0. Farrell began with a base on balls, Wilson and Rusie made hits, and Bierbauer dropped Fuller's fly which precipitated the riot at the plate. Then Killen was taken out and Hawley went in to pitch. Burke was thrown out at first on a slow bounder to Bierbauer, who was playing a deep field, but Rusie, who was on third, never tried to score. Tiernan shot one to Clingman, however, and Rusie then ran home only to be easily caught. With two men still on bases, George Davis popped up a foul for Sugden.

In the last half of this inning Rusie had nobody to blame but himself for Pittsburgh's two runs. After Beckley had struck out Stenzel single and Smith took a base on balls. Bierbauer flied out, Cross came to the rescue with a corking three-bagger, and both scored. The New Yorks scored quite a bluff in the sixth, but only scored one run. Murphy, who had succeeded Doyle, took four balls and Van Haltren scratched a hit. Murphy got to third on Farrell's fly to right field and Wilson hit one to Hawley, who caught Murphy on his way to the plate. It was stupid base running, and still more so when the ex-Yale man ran out the line to avoid being touched. Rusie put a single in right, but it availed nothing, as Fuller was settled at first. The New York got another run in the eighth on Clingman's wild throw of Van Haltren's grounder and a scratch hit by Wilson. In the ninth Fuller started with four balls, but Burke flied to Donovan and Tiernan struck out. Davis sent a safe one to centre, but both men were left, as Murphy grounded to Bierbauer.

That was the signal for the crowd to make a rush for poor Murray, and the spectators came across the field from all directions. But the police were too quick for them, and the umpire was escorted under the grand stand to put on his street clothes. The bluecoats then ordered the mob to move on, and proceeded to clear the field. Everybody had had his money's worth. The score:

BROOKLYN, 9; CHICAGO, 6.

Two of Anson's colts, Dahlen and Everett, played so poorly at Eastern Park yesterday that the Brooklyns won, whereas had Hutchinson received proper support the game would have resulted in a victory for the Chicagos. There is some excuse for Dahlen's errors. He tried to make the plays, but seemed unable to stop the easiest kind of hits. The three errors of Everett netted the Brooklyns five runs, and considering the disadvantage Hutchinson kept on fooling the home players. Of the nine runs scored by the Brooklyns only one was earned. With the exception of Lachance the home players did no batting to speak of. Lachance made a great catch in the seventh inning, running within a few feet of the grand stand and pulling down Decker's foul fly. In the following inning Shindle and Corcoran were loudly applauded for fine plays. With the exception of Hutchinson, Lange and Donohue were the only Chicago players who displayed any vim. Lange caught everything in sight and found the ball safely the first four times he stepped to the plate. Decker made the slide of his life in the eighth inning while attempting to field Lucid's hit. As he was about to step on the bicycle track he took a header, and with both feet in the air made a slide of nearly fifteen feet. The score:

Boston, June 8.—To-day's game at the South End was nothing more than a farce. Cunningham and Clements faced two auxiliaries each, and McCreary, who succeeded the latter, was wild as a hawk. PHILADELPHIA, June 8.—The home club rounded out a week of defeats this afternoon by losing to Cleveland in a ten-inning game. Thompson knocking the ball over the centre field fence in the third, and Delehanty cracking out a home run over the right field fence in the fifth. Attendance, 5,700. The score:
