These figures deterred some from buying, but on the whole there was more inclination to buy than to sell on the rise abroad and the New Orleans crop estimates. Meanwhile the South was offering cotton less freely to Europe, and the cable reports that New Orleans was firm on the spot while Galveston was slightly higher. The New York Cotton Exchange average range on the 15,000 bales the lowest being on the lowest, the highest being on the highest, the least being on the least, the most being on the most, the fewest being on the fewest, the most being on the most, the least being on the least, the most being on the most, the least being on the least, the most being on the most, the least being on the least
