reams upon reams of documents, all with the same name on both sides of the "cases." H. W. Leonard is another man who takes an interest in unsuccessful matrimony. For twenty-five years he has been suffering bonds which galled. And yet, after a quarter of a century of the trouble, he recently found a new song.

He is in the Bankruptcy court, and Mr. Leonard. The man Bankruptcy court, he wife and complained to the Commissioner that his wife left her home in Brooklyn, where they seven years ago, taking with her the furniture and goods belonging to the plaintiff. The complaint goes on to allege that the defendant is living with another man in Brooklyn, and that she is a habitual drunkard. Mr. Leonard asks that his wife be compelled to give him her property, and that she be enjoined from disposing of it. The case will be argued before Referee Hotchkiss in Brooklyn.

A Patient at Bellevue Who Had His Suspicion of Apparent Kindness.

Patients at Bellevue Hospital are not always destitute. Some of them are able to pay, gain admittance through a roll. It was a roll that got one Last Side young man into the surgical wards recently.

He knew every one about the hospital from the unpaid orderlies to the superintendent, and he had political influence. Before going into the institution he left a liberal sum of money with an undertaker in the neighborhood with which to buy him delicacies. Every day good, wholesome dishes were taken to him by the runner for the undertaker.

The less fortunate patients in the ward often looked at him with envy, when the smell of the food would reawaken their appetites deadened by the coarse hospital fare.

On one occasion the runner was not on hand when the patient sent for some chicken fricassee and the undertaker himself carried in the dish. He deposited it on a stool table alongside of the patient's cot and then left, saying he would call later.

"Say, cull, who's de swell nigger dat brought yer de feed?" asked one of the less fortunate patients from a nearby cot.

"That?" [illegible] the undertaker up the street, who is a very close friend of the family of the patient, at the same time deserting the cot with apparent relish. I know, too, he is more than I care about and you don't notin' to do with you." [illegible]

The other patient answered that he didn't care for any of the food, much to the surprise of the well to do patient, who cried:

"What's the matter, [illegible] lost your appetite or what? The doctor let you eat."

3,757 PATENTS TO WOMEN.

Feminine Ingenuity Shown Chiefly in Clothes and the Household.

From the establishment of the Patent Office by act of Congress in 1790, on the recommendation of President George Washington, to Jan. 1, 1901, 3,757 patents were granted to women. As a rule women take out but one patent.

While the majority of patents granted to women are for improvements in wearing apparel and in articles for household use, they have invented in addition aiding to [illegible] and [illegible] horseshoes, agricultural implements and [illegible]

Since the establishment of the Patent Office there have been 15 patents issued to colored men, of which 8 were issued to one colored inventor and 2 to another.

Less than one hundred patents were issued prior to 1836. [illegible] Thomas H. Richards follows with 23, George Westinghouse with 22, Thomas S. Mason with 16, Philip Diehl with 12, and Louis A. Johnson with 11.
