ASPHALT CO. FORCED TO HELP

COMPELLED TO AID BOTH CASTRO AND MATOS IN VENEZUELA.

Employees Testify in Venezuela's Suit for Damages That Supplies and Troops Were Carried Through Fear of Trouble—Instructed to Avoid Entanglements.

The testimony at yesterday's hearing in the suit of Venezuela against the New York and Bermudez Company for assisting the Matos revolution three years ago indicated that the asphalt company was impartially levied on for supplies and aid by the forces of both Matos and President Castro.

Charles C. Link testified that he had been stenographer and cable clerk in the New York office of the company while the revolution was on. He denied that any of the messages from Gen. Greene, president of the asphalt combine, while Gen. Greene was in Europe dealt with the revolution, and that any sent from New York to the company's Venezulean agents did so. An affidavit was read to him of O. E. Thurber, vice-president of the A. L. Barber Asphalt Company, which declared that Link had told Thurber in talk about a cable message he had transmitted from Venezuela concerning quantities of arms and ammunition supposed to be furnished to the revolutionists by the Government. Link denied that he had ever told Thurber any such thing. One message, he said, spoke of the influence of A. L. Barber in Venezuela and said he might become President.

Joseph Perry said he was in Venezuela for the company from 1897 to 1904, most of the time at the company's asphalt port, Guanoco. He said: "The country around the Bermudez Lake and down to Guanoco was completely overrun by the revolutionists for more than a year. We refused to pay mining taxes to Gen. Ducharme of the Matos forces, as we had already done so to the Venezuelan Consul in Trinidad. First we were obliged to transport Government troops, and when the revolutionists came along we had to carry their men on the railroad from the lake to Guanoco in the same way. My orders from my superior officers were always to preserve neutrality.

Perry said that the employees of the Bermudez company had often given the revolutionists cattle and provisions to avoid trouble. While acting superintendent at Guanoco, he said, he had often given them food on their demand. He said that Major Rafferty, managing director of the company at Port of Spain, Trinidad, had given orders that the company steamer running between the port and Guanoco was never to carry supplies or money for the revolutionists.

Perry was appointed superintendent at Guanoco in place of Jeffs, who testified earlier in the hearing that orders had been given him by Rafferty to aid the revolutionists as much as possible. "I know that Jeffs was discharged for personally aiding the revolutionists against Rafferty's orders," said Perry. "He told me that he often brought money to Port of Spain for the revolutionists, and always made a little for himself. On one occasion he took over silver for the revolutionists' tax collector and returned with a check on a Trinidad bank. He made $80 on that. He told me about two weeks ago that he felt sore on Major Rafferty for discharging him and wanted to get even with the company."

Perry told how he had refused to give passage to relatives of the revolutionary General, Ducharine, on the steamer Viking to Trinidad or to carry money for the revolutionists. Later he took the money over, he said, to avoid trouble from the insurgents. He had about 160 laborers under him, mostly foreigners. Nearly all the Venezuelans had been commandeered by the generals of both sides.

William J. Ewart, managing director of the Bermudez concern at Caracas from June 14, 1902, until 1904, affirmed his affidavit testifying to the strict neutrality maintained by all the company's employees throughout the revolution. Before he left New York, he said, Gen. Greene, president of the combine, had thus instructed him:

"You are going into a foreign land to handle the business of an American company. You must avoid entanglement with all political complications and respect and recognize the existing authorities."

These Soft Hats were made by the best maker of men's hats in the world. They are his Fall sample line—and as such are naturally the very latest models.

The size-range is complete; and the models are so varied that every man may be suited. Young men, particularly, should seize this chance.

CLOTHING The YOUNG MAN

We do it as it should be done—better every season. And we do more of it, too, every year—never as much as in the last twelve months.

Big boys, young men—call them what you will—are among our most particular customers, from the time they dawn upon the horizon with their first long-trouser suits. We cater to them well—evolve styles for their own particular benefit—youthful, smart; not older men's styles whittled down.

You'll find all the season's styles youthfully reflected in these Fall and Winter Suits:

Fancy mixed cheviots, in Single or Double-breasted Sack Suits, $10 to $22.

Stylish Worsteds, in dressy gray effects, $20 to $25.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

The "College Widow" And Other Shoes

The "College Widow" is the snappiest, most distinctively stylish three-dollar shoe we know of for women. We christened it. It has in it all the newest wrinkles of shoe fashion.

It is made in button style—large buttons. Laced, too. In black Russia and patent leather. The narrow toe; military heel. Certainly the ideal shoe for the young woman who likes a shoe with some "dash" to it.

At three dollars here are some other shoes for women—new, stylish, all of them:

Black Russia leather, Blucher cut, narrow toes, Cuban heels.

Patent colt, button, smart narrow toe last, medium high heels.

Dull-finished kidskin, lace, with Wunderhoox—the easy lacing sort.

Patent kidskin, lace and button, medium toe lasts.

These shoes are all made with high-grade oak soles, welted and stitched, and on lasts particularly suited to young women.

YOUNG EAST SIDER DENIES ANY SHARE IN BURGLARY.

Mother, Fiancee and Many Friends Stand by Rabinowitz—Stolen Goods Found in Room Over His Saloon—Put There Unknown to Him, He Insists—He Is Held

Among five young men arrested last Friday by Detectives Kemp, Hart and Kramer of the Eldridge street station on suspicion of being implicated in a burglary was Michael Rabinowitz, a saloonkeeper of 57 Allen street.

In a room over the saloon the detectives found woolen goods valued at $1,500 belonging to Henry L. Rosenthal of 34 Cooper Square. In another room, connected with the saloon, the detectives found three young men playing cards. Rabinowitz ran upstairs when he heard the commotion and the whole party was arrested. Later, Isaac Dutchman of 379 East Tenth street was taken into custody. He was the expressman who carted the goods to the place.

All the prisoners were hustled to Police Headquarters on Saturday morning and shown to the detectives. Then their pictures were taken. In the Essex Market police court later they were held for examination. Rabinowitz furnished bail immediately. He was formally charged with receiving stolen goods.

The examination came up yesterday before Magistrate Cornell. Rabinowitz is 22 years old, a high school graduate, and lives with his mother over the saloon. He made an earnest plea to Magistrate Cornell yesterday to be exonerated.

"I am put down in newspapers and at Police Headquarters," he said, "as a burglar. I am engaged to be married to Ida Alper, the daughter of a New Jersey brewer, and she is here in the court to defend me. So is my mother. Some days ago I had a vacant room, off the main room, upstairs, to let. I let it to a man who said he was William Teuzer, an auctioneer of Brooklyn. The room can be reached by a stairway from the street. On the day the detectives visited the place I was seeing my sweetheart off on the Erie Railroad ferry. When I got back and went up the rear stairs I was arrested."

His fiancée corroborated his statement, as did his mother.

"I will hold all," said the Magistrate, "as there has been a burglary, and let a jury decide."

"Do you think a jury would convict this boy as a receiver?" asked Lawyer Snitkin, counsel for Rabinowitz.

"No, I do not," said the Magistrate; "but he appears to be implicated."

Rabinowitz's friends include many prominent East Side business men and a number of them were in court to bail him out. Rabinowitz said afterward:

"It is hard for a young man like me who is just going to take up the study of law and about to marry a respectable girl to be branded as a burglar because the saloon I run for my mother happened to be used without my knowledge. The room where these goods were found is reached from the street, and people in the saloon saw nothing being carried in. The goods were in there only a few minutes when the police came along.

"Since my arrest one of the detectives in the case approached me and tried to shake me down to have me turned out. As an innocent man I refused to give up a cent. When I am discharged downtown I will turn all the facts over to District Attorney Jerome. My mother and my friends will spend thousands sooner than give up one cent to the police, and they will see that my reputation is cleared."

QUEER DEALS IN DIAMONDS.

Bail of the Klein Brothers Increased—$50,000 Claims Against Them.

The three Klein brothers, Joseph, Morris and Sam, of 51 Maiden lane, who are charged with the larceny of $2,700 worth of diamonds from Eduard Van Dam of 27 City Hall place, were arraigned in the Tombs police court yesterday. Their hearing was adjourned until October 19, but not until Magistrate Mayo, at the request of Assistant District Attorney Vandiver, had increased their aggregate bail from $1,500 to $5,000.

Mr. Vandiver made the request on the strength of statements submitted to the District Attorney's office by the Jewelers' Association and Board of Trade to the effect that there are claims, similar to Van Dam's, for about $50,000. Van Dam, who is one of the largest lapidaries in the world, says that he delivered $15,000 worth of diamonds to the Kleins on memorandum. The Kleins went into bankruptcy without returning the stones or paying for them, and their assets were declared to be $42.

H. A. Groen & Bro. of 153 Maiden lane allege that they delivered $5,300 worth of diamonds to the Kleins, not as a sale, but to be shown to prospective customers, and that the Kleins have not returned them in ten days, as agreed.

They Don't Let Folks Drown Here.

Carl Iversen, a homeless Norwegian, had a fit on the Battery wall at low tide yesterday morning and fell into the river. John Boss, an Italian bootblack, about 17 years old, jumped in after him. Dick Ganley, the sporting cop, who is past 60, thought the bootblack was committing suicide and ran over from his post at the employment bureau in the Barge Office prepared to take out Boss and then take him in. He helped them both out.

ADVICE TO YOUNG DOCTORS.

Dr. Lambert Points Out Pitfalls at Opening of Columbia Medical School.

Dr. Samuel Lambert, dean of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University, at the opening of the school yesterday delivered some remarks very startling to medical educators. His theme was "Some Present Fallacies in Medical Education," and he treated the subject at considerable length.

He attacked particularly the custom of students who entered hospitals as substitutes for the house staff members.

"The nervous rush for hospital appointments," he said, "leads the student into a fallacious seeking after special points and brings about the widespread habit among students of trying to find out the personal views of the several attending physicians in the particular hospital for which the student expects to try the examination.

"Personal views represent in each attending physician only some temporary status and transitory point of view in the mental attitude of the physician in question. No physician has or can have exclusive points of view on such a subject as medicine. The science of medicine is not an exact science, and this fact cannot be impressed too early on the students of it. The cultivation of this fallacy is bringing up a generation of doctors who will and do fall easy victims to the cult of those modern idols represented by the secret and patented remedies of anti-this and contra-that. These modern 'medicine men' are always working the newest fad to the neglect of the accumulated experience of the healing art. The science and art of medicine is not a racetrack, where 'tips' and 'touts' have any standing to lead one to pick the winner. The player of the game of medicine must leave nothing to chance, and he will find no short cut to success."

Another fallacy to which Dr. Lambert called attention was what he called "trade unionism in medical education," in which he compared the curriculum to the work of the trade unions in limiting the work to be done by its members. He said that it had been the fixed policy of the college for some time to limit the opportunity granted to each individual student of medicine. No one student was permitted to secure more work than another, at least with official sanction. The result had been that the students with better equipment, either of preliminary training or of natural endowment and intelligence, had been compelled to limit their activities to correspond with the capabilities for work and for intellectual absorption of their most poorly prepared and their least intelligent fellows.

"To characterize such a system as 'unionizing of medical education,'" says Dr. Lambert, "is to stigmatize it as a companion only of those degenerated trade unions which have fallen under the control of the worst elements among their members. But the condition under criticism has not developed through the efforts of the laggards in medicine—on the contrary, it is the result of the work of the leaders in the profession, who have had the control of medical education, in an honest but misguided effort to fulfil their whole duty to every student."

JEWELS WEREN'T STOLEN.

Mrs. Chute Only Forgot Where She Put $5,000 Worth Away Too Safely.

Charles R. Chute, a real estate broker at 220 Broadway, who until recently resided in the Claremont Hall apartment house, at 112th street and Broadway, reported to the police of the West 125th street station yesterday that his wife had been robbed of jewelry valued at $5,000. The list included a number of diamond rings, a pair of bracelets, a tiara, three brooches, a pair of earrings and several other articles.

Mr. Chute said that on Wednesday he moved with his family to the Hotel Narragansett, at Broadway and Ninety-third street. He said that his wife packed the jewels in a small chamois bag and laid it down until she was ready to put it into a valise. When she was ready it could not be found. Detectives were sent to the Narragansett to ask Mrs. Chute if she had looked carefully through all her baggage and furniture.

The detectives and Mrs. Chute started to go through all the household goods, and after nearly two hours search the diamonds were found tucked away in one corner of the top drawer of a dressing case. Mrs. Chute was so surprised that she could not speak for a while. She said that she had no recollection of placing the jewels there

TRUCK DRIVER'S REPARTEE.

Green's Flow of Language Got Him Into Tombs Court and Out Again.

The ready invective of big John Green, a truckman who has a reputation for repartee, landed him in the Tombs police court yesterday before Magistrate Mayo. Policeman Moran of the Church street station house said that he had ordered Green to keep to the right along West street and that Green had used abusive and profane language.

"Do you hear that?" asked the Magistrate. "He says you used profane language."

"Well, well," replied the defendant, "I never heard of a policeman afraid of profanity. He ought to teach Sunday school!"

"But you were abusive!"

"Now, see here Judge, if I was a scrapper I wouldn't be a truck driver. I'd sail in for pugilistic honors as a professional, not as an amateur."

"But if I let you go you'll do the same thing over again."

"Indeed I won't. When I see that cop, he can have the whole street to himself. I'll do like the gentleman who was arrested for driving a truck in Central Park. He said 'Next time I'm arrested for driving in the Park, I'll be driving up Broadway.'"

Green wasn't fined.

THREE NEW YORK WOMEN HURT.

Flung From Richard Sidenberg's Automobile in Connecticut.

GREENWICH, Conn., Sept. 28.—Miss Adelaide Wallach, daughter of Leopold Wallach, a lawyer who has offices at 53 Wall street and a town house at 10 East Thirtieth street, New York, broke her collarbone, received a severe scalp wound and was severely bruised in an automobile accident at the foot of Nigger Hole Hill, Boston Post Road, this afternoon. Miss Elsie Borg, daughter of the late Simon Borg of New York, and Miss Sidenberg, daughter of Richard Sidenberg, a New York importer who lives at 157 West Fifty-seventh street, were thrown out of the automobile and bruised. All are under the care of Dr. T. J. Biggs of Stamford.

Many accidents have happened at this spot. The road is winding and there are sharp turns and a heavy grade. On either side of the street is a ditch four feet deep. The young women were out for a ride in Mr. Sidenberg's machine, and were returning to their summer homes on Palmer's Hill, Stamford.

As they were rushing down the heavy grade the steering gear broke. The machine skidded in the sand, and the chauffeur, Arthur Pennoyer, seems to have lost his head. The car plunged off the road into the ditch unchecked and hit a stone, and Pennoyer and Miss Wallach, who were on the front seat, were thrown over the hood into a brook. Miss Sidenberg and Miss Borg were also thrown out. Another car happened to be passing at the time. The young women were taken to Greenwich, where their injuries were attended to, and then sent to their homes at Stamford. At their residences at Stamford to-night it was said that Miss Wallach's condition was not dangerous. The chauffeur says the machine was moving slowly at the time of the accident and this saved all from very serious injury

HOMESICK YELLOWHEAD.

Claus From Germany Decides to Go Straight Back.

Claus Seemann, a robust, blond German of the Viking type, who landed at Ellis Island on Tuesday from the North German Lloyd steamship Grosser Kurfuerst, sailed for home yesterday aboard the Friederich der Grosse. He had the worst case of homesickness ever seen at the island. He is only 19, and has spent all his life on his father's farm. He was the most melancholy looking person in the line that passed the inspector, and after he had given his pedigree and said he was going to Iowa to work on the farm of his aunt there, he added hastily: "But I don't want to go. I would rather go back to Germany. I cannot stay here."

An effort was made by the officials to get Claus to reconsider his decision, but he said he was sure he would never feel well again until he was on the way home, and that he knew that he could never get along in America. He was too promising an immigrant to send away, and he was asked to please be good and stay, but his homesickness had so demoralized him that there was nothing else to do but send him back. He got joyous as soon as he heard the news and left the island smiling.

ARREST TWO BABIES.

Little Girl Killed by Fall of Scrap of Wood From Roof—Police Get Busy.

A chunk of wood weighing about half a pound, and about six inches long, either dropped or thrown from the roof of 412 West Fifty-sixth street yesterday, struck Winifred Lawless, two-years old, on the head and caused her death. The child was taken to Roosevelt Hospital. She never recovered consciousness and died shortly after her arrival.

An investigation was made by the police of the West Forty-seventh street station, and John Lynch, four years old, and Jerry Lynch, aged five, were arrested and taken to the station house. Later the children were released by Coroner Brown, and their parents were ordered to produce them this morning in the West Side police court.

The body of the little girl was taken to her home at 410 West Fifty-sixth street.
