RICHMOND COOL TO HEARST.

CROWDS HEAR HIM SPEAK, BUT ENTHUSIASM IS NOT GREAT.

And McClellan Sympathizers Cheer for the Mayor—Tale of a Plot to Disable His Ferryboat and Make Him Disappoint His Audience—He Attacks Cockran.

William R. Hearst and his fellow campaigners on the Municipal Ownership ticket went to Staten Island last night and spoke at two meetings, one on the North Shore at West New Brighton and the other on the South Shore at Stapleton. There was a crowd at both meetings, but on the whole the enthusiasm did not indicate that Richmond is as hot for the Hearst ticket as other places where Mr. Hearst has spoken. A lot of McClellan sympathizers showed up for the first time, too, and yelled for the Mayor in opposition to the Hearst cheers.

The Hearst campaign managers had planned to make it a big municipal ownership night on the island. A special train of six cars was run from Tottenville to Stapleton to bring people in the middle of the borough to the meeting there.

Mr. Hearst intended to go down to the island on the 8 o'clock boat. Three automobiles with other members of his party took that boat, but Mr. Hearst with some of his personal friends went down on the 7 o'clock boat and waited on the island for the automobiles. The reason for this, the Hearst people said, was that they had received information that plotters were going to tie up the machinery on the municipal ferryboat and leave Mr. Hearst to drift around the bay. Just what authority they had for this they did not say, but they put credit enough in the report to advise Mr. Hearst to take an earlier boat.

Several private sleuths went down with the other members of the party on the Queens at 8 o'clock. The machinery didn't go out of business. She bumped the landing at Staten Island pretty hard, but that was all. The boat on which Mr. Hearst travelled incognito an hour earlier also had an uneventful trip, but some of Mr. Hearst's friends were sure all the evening that there was something in that plot story.

Mr. Hearst waited at a Staten Island hotel until 9:30 o'clock before starting for the meeting and he reached the Union Opera House at West New Brighton at a little before 10. The streets were deserted, but the hall was well filled. There was no great demonstration when he entered and there were some McClellan cheers in the back of the hall. Mr. Hearst was well in the middle of his speech when he was stopped by a man who shouted out so that everybody could hear him:

"What about the Maine monument fund?"

Mr. Hearst greeted this with a laugh and a ready answer.

"If your money, my friend," he said, "is as safe as the Maine monument fund you'll be on easy street the rest of your life."

The answer seemed to take with the crowd, for they cheered and the band started playing.

"The issues are clear, our promises are definite and our performance of them will be definite," said Mr. Hearst. "We're opposed to bosses and boss rule; we're opposed to grafters and graft, and we're opposed to an administration that turns our city over to the traction trust and the gas trust. We think that both parties should be taught that they may secure nominations by serving the bosses and the corporations, but that they can only secure election by serving the people. We stand for the principle of direct nominations, and if elected we won't have any bosses to serve."

As Mr. Hearst was leaving the hall the McClellan shouters made themselves heard again, but the Hearst shouters drowned them out. The meeting at the German Club rooms in Stapleton was larger and there was more enthusiasm. Everybody stood up when Mr. Hearst entered and waved flags. He got a great burst of cheers when he said:

"Some of the papers say that if I could carry out half the promises I have made every one should vote for us, but we don't propose to compromise on a 50 per cent. basis. We intend to carry out all our promises, and we will do so if you help us by electing a straight ticket so that we will be unhampered. We will levy taxes impartially and the wealthy tax dodgers will be made to pay the same percentage as the smaller taxpayers. These promises are honestly made, and we intend to keep them honestly."

Mr. Hearst pitched into Mr. Cockran again, referring to him as "the Honorable Bought Cockran, who has become so enamored of his gas boss that he now peddles his oratory at so much per cubic foot." He promised the Staten Islanders 55 cent. gas, in spite of Mr. Cockran's assertion that it was impossible.

"I do not want simply to hold office," he said. "I want to make a record and deserve your good opinion. If you do not elect me I will not be sore or disappointed, and if I am not elected I still will do the best I can with the means I have to serve you."

The band preceded Mr. Hearst out of the hall and tried to start a parade as escort, but only about fifty trailed along behind. Mr. Hearst bowed in response to the cheers from the crowd that left the hall to get a look at him and bowed again as he passed the band and the small procession on his way to the ferry. The ferryboat landed him in Manhattan safe and sound.

THE WANDERING OSBORNE.

Dodges From the Rain Into Some Meetings and Finds Others Closed.

James W. Osborne made less than half the speeches on his schedule last night. He stayed so long in The Bronx that the rest of the meetings had dispersed into the rain before he got downtown. They couldn't hurry him. The speeches he did make were all alike. He conversed a little with the crowd, detailed the now familiar charges against Jerome and attacked the press on and off all through.

At the Melrose District Club, his first meeting, there were perhaps 400 men and boys standing in a little upstairs hall. The windows were closed against the Bronx tempests and the tobacco smoke was thick. The crowd was apparently glad to see him.

"If the New York press can find a single discreditable act of mine during the twelve years I was in the District Attorney's office I wish they would print it. They can't find a thing. They are destroying my reputation by garbling phrases," said Osborne.

The crowd was ready to help him along.

"One paper says I described Jerome as floorwalker the other night at Zeltner's Hall."

"It's a lie!" said somebody who thought that was the cue.

"No, I did; but he had described himself as that the night before. He said he was a floorwalker in the District Attorney's office.

"Jerome didn't tell people all the truth about that Park avenue accident," he went on. "He didn't say he called Chauncey Depew as a witness for the defendant to get his only conviction, this poor man Whistler. And three weeks later, too, a New York Central lawyer was appointed an assistant in Jerome's office.

"I'm going to repeat that charge of faker against Jerome. The newspapers were frantic about it this morning. I mean by a faker a man that promises and don't make good."

Another big Democratic crowd was at the Old Homestead Gardens, at Ninetieth street and Third avenue. They cheered when Osborne came in out of the rain.

"The press," he began, "hasn't the courage to print any denial that I said a single one of these things attributed to me. Jerome has tried only one case—and that a little police court one—since he entered office. Now, if I'm elected the first thing I'll do is to empanel a Grand Jury and give those insurance officers a fair trial myself, and if I find the evidence is effective, you know what I'll do. The bigger and richer a criminal the better I like to prosecute him."

Terrace Garden and the others were closed before Osborne turned up.

NEW RUSSIAN THEATRE.

Paul Orleneff Begins Productions Which Run to Shakespeare and Ibsen.

Orleneff's Russian Lyceum, a new theatre at 15 East Third street, was opened last night. The play was S. Naidyonoff's four act drama, "Vanyushin's Children." The leading role, Alexyei, was assumed by Paul Orleneff, who was well received. His support was excellent.

The actors, of course, spoke Russian, but for the benefit of those who did not understand the language a synopsis in English was provided.

For the next seven months, Mr. Orleneff and Madam Alla Nasimoff will present a number of plays by Shakespeare, Ibsen, Hauptmann and other modern playwrights. Mr. Orleneff and his company decided to come to America, because the Russian Government would not permit them to produce certain plays in the country of the Czar, and they have found a warm welcome here. The Third street Lyceum was fitted up for them at the expense of Russian-Americans who are interested in the drama.

OBITUARY.

Arthur Foster Bowers, formerly city editor of the Tribune, died from paralysis yesterday morning at his home, 159 West Forty-fifth street. Mr. Bowers was one of the sons of the Rev. Dr. C. N. Bowers, a Baptist clergyman of Clinton, Mass. Mr. Bowers was graduated from Brown in 1871, and immediately began to devote his energies to newspaper work. For a year he was on the Providence Journal. Then he came to the Tribune, and except for brief periods of illness worked for that paper continuously until he died. In 1880 he succeeded to the place of city editor. In the fall of 1890 his health then beginning to fail, he relinquished the city editorship, but since then, when his physical condition permitted, he had contributed articles to the editorial page. Mr. Bowers was a member of the University and Brown clubs. He leaves a widow. The body was taken to Clinton, Mass., yesterday, and the funeral will be held at that place.

George Butler Taylor, an old time newspaper man of this city, died on Thursday in St. Vincent's Hospital, in his sixty-sixth year. He had been a reporter on the Times for more than twenty-six years. At 15 he ran away to sea from his home in Bromptom, England, and served a number of years before the mast. As a sailor he visited many parts of the world. Afterward he took up the study of French and went to Paris to Galignani's library. In 1868 he came to America and for some time made his living by teaching French and English in this city. He served his apprenticeship as a reporter on three daily newspapers, the Herald, the World and the Daily News and in the employ of two news gathering associations. In 1879 he joined the Times staff.

Henry William Steele, 73 years old, head of the Scovill Manufacturing Company of Waterbury, Conn., died early yesterday morning at his residence in Montclair. He was born in Waterbury, Conn., and married Miss Mary Clauson of New York. He moved to Montclair thirty years ago and became one of the town's foremost citizens. He leaves a widow, two sons, Henry Randolph and Irving E. Steele, and one daughter, Mrs. Harry Hallenbeck of Montclair.

Carl A. Schindler, a German patriot who took part in the revolution in the Fatherland over half a century ago, died on Thursday at his home, 287 Palisade avenue, West Hoboken. He was 79 years old. He was an intimate friend of the late Gen. Franz Sigel and acted as a pallbearer at his funeral. Mr. Schindler once served as a member of the West Hoboken Board of Education. He leaves two sons and four daughters.

Helen H. Fessenden, the wife of the Hon. Samuel Fessenden, died to-day at 8 A. M. at her home in Stamford, Conn. Mr. Fessenden and all the members of the family were at the bedside. Mr. Fessenden having been called a few days ago from Atlantic City, where he went to spend a few weeks. Mrs. Fessenden became ill early this week.

Miss Elsa Kinsey, who had been employed as a clerk in the Dead Letter Office since November 2, 1865, died from a surgical operation at Columbia Hospital Thursday. Her continuous term of service as a clerk in the same office was forty years to a day.
