LONG HITS ROOSEVELT AGAIN

ACCUSES THE PRESIDENT OF INSPIRING ATTACKS.

Declares That Mr. Roosevelt Has Written to Naturalists Asking Them to Discredit Long—Says the President Is Back of John Burroughs's Article.

STAMFORD, Conn., July 13.—In the July number of the Outlook is an article from John Burroughs, the naturalist, entitled "President Roosevelt, Nature Lover and Observer." It is very complimentary to the President, and following on the heels of Mr. Burroughs's visit to the President is regarded as significant by Dr. William J. Long and his friends. Last week Ernest Ingersoll, a naturalist, went over to Oyster Bay on the President's invitation. A day or two later he came out with a letter attacking Dr. Long.

The Outlook's article has brought out another interview with Dr. Long, whom the President attacked as a nature faker. Dr. Long accuses the President of hiding behind nature writers in an effort to discredit him and says he knows of letters the President has written to some nature writers asking them to attack him.

"Mr. Roosevelt is at the bottom of that whole flattering article," he said. "Read for yourself and see with what infinite carelessness he has arranged the details, so that his flattering clerk would fall over every significant trifle, from the little bird to the deer's tail and the bear's skin. It is simply a repetition of his first alleged interview, in which he attacked me and proclaimed himself the "world's authority" on game animals. Instead of being the world's authority he is known to be absolutely mistaken in his dogmatic opinion, and instead of being a great naturalist he was shown from his own books to be chiefly a game killer, with a frightful record of slaughter.

"These records are now being copied all over the country, and Mr. Roosevelt finds himself suddenly on the defensive. And what is he doing? I have been on a little still hunt myself, and find that he is writing to other naturalists inviting them to visit him and asking them to attack me, and so divert attention from himself and from the real question at issue.

"Instead of meeting the real issue of truth and honor like a man, he retires behind the official silence. He gives it out publicly that I am 'too small game to shoot at twice.' Meanwhile he is privately writing to other naturalists, asking them, with all the subtle influence of Presidential favor, to take shots at the same small game which he missed, and which, instead of running away, began most uncomfortably to shoot back.

"I don't mean now the jealous old man whose hatred of me has become an obsession, nor the sycophants who curry favor with the President by rushing into print in his defence. I mean naturalists who have something to say, to whom he has written asking them to attack me and also have had the manliness to refuse to do his dirty work, leaving him to face the issue which he himself has raised. I know where there is one of these unsuccessful letters and would ask nothing better than to publish it. It would be a most interesting commentary on the ways and methods of 'the world's authority.'

"As for the article of Mr. Burroughs I need only to point out two things: First, he is praising his influential friend; and, second, he is attacking another man of whom he is intensely jealous. That is a combination to make a special pleader whose hands are tied and who cannot be considered seriously.

"Just one paragraph shows the whole spirit of his patron better than the whole flattering article. It is the very last paragraph, in which Mr. Burroughs quotes from one of the President's latest books as follows:

"'All hunters should be nature lovers. It is to be hoped that the days of wasteful, boastful slaughter are past and that from now on the hunter will stand foremost in working for the preservation of the wild life, whether big or little.' And Mr. Burroughs exclaims, 'Surely, this man is the rarest kind of a sportsman.'

"Now that sounds fine, like his talk of the 'square deal,' but it is not from Mr. Roosevelt's preaching but from his practise that we are to judge the kind of man he is. In that same book from which Mr. Burroughs quotes I find Mr. Roosevelt's own record of a bear hunt in the spring, when mother bears are weakened by the long winter's fast and by the care of their young. In his previous books we find plenty of that 'wasteful, boastful slaughter' which he now piously deplores; but with his changed heart we may look hopefully for something different. On this last bear hunt, aided by his savage pack of dogs and hunters, he killed eleven bears, all weak mother animals and their helpless cubs.

"In a word, he kills off all the bears in the whole region and all hope of a further supply and then preaches of game protection, and even proclaims that all true sportsmen 'should strike hands' in the effort to save our few remaining game animals from destruction.

"Here is more pure, unadulterated sham. We could listen to such preaching if we had first seen Mr. Roosevelt shake hands with himself and let nine or ten of those mother bears and their cubs go free; and we could tolerate his talk of the square deal if we had first seen him offering it to any animal or man that crossed his trail or that happened to differ with him. This balloon of a great naturalist and sportsman is too thoroughly punctured to ever fly again in the face of those who can read his own records. I think I need offer no further comment on this 'rarest kind of a sportsman' and his flattering clerk."

Asked if he would give the names of the naturalists to whom the President is said to have written Dr. Long said:

"No; I don't want to drag anybody else into this controversy. If they choose to enter that is their own affair. I have a score of letters here from Mr. Roosevelt's own friends and political supporters. Naturally I would like to use them; but of course I cannot unless the writers themselves make them public."

Asked if he had anything further to say in regard to the President's original attack Dr. Long answered

"Yes, I have something very decided to say. Here——"

He showed the reporter affidavits with drawings of game from naturalists and surgeons, whose positions certainly give them the right to speak.

"Here is proof enough to satisfy any reasonable man that I was absolutely right in the caribou-wolf matter and that Mr. Roosevelt was as absolutely wrong. I want enough to satisfy even an unreasonable man," he added. "The delay is due simply to the difficulty of finding my witnesses, who are now in the interior of Alaska and Labrador. I shall of course publish these proofs and give Mr. Roosevelt another chance to answer."

"Suppose he doesn't?"

"It makes little difference to me whether he does or not, so long as every man who reads can see for himself who is right. It may, however, make considerable difference in the opinion of those who supposed Mr. Roosevelt was honest in his talk of a square deal."

News of Plays and Players.

Cecil DeMille has been engaged to play his original part in "The Prince Chap," supporting Cyril Scott on his Western tour.

Articles of agreement were signed yesterday providing for the incorporation under the laws of the State of New York of the Shipman-DeMille Company, with a capital of $150,000. This corporation has been formed by Mrs. H. C. DeMille, Ernest Shipman and two men whose names are withheld. The purpose of this company is to establish Wright Lorimer as a producing manager. The first undertaking of the new company will be to offer Wright Lorimer in his new play, "The Quicksands," by Alicia Ramsey and Rudolph de Cordova.

CATHOLIC SUMMER SCHOOL.

Lectures on Astronomy and Song Recitals Were Features of the Second Week.

CLIFF HAVEN, N. Y., July 13.—The sixteenth session of the Catholic Summer School promises to outdo all its predecessors in social and educational value. In spite of the continued cool weather the attendance is slowly but surely increasing, and judging from present conditions the end of July or the beginning of August will see the crowd well over the thousand mark. The cottages are rapidly filling up and the big restaurant at meal times is beginning to have many well filled tables.

The feature of the second week of the session was the visit of Section E of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, who left on Wednesday after a week's stay at the summer school, during which they made trips to various points in the surrounding country examining interesting geological strata. With the party, which included Dr. A. C. Lane, State Geologist of Michigan, and Professors Emerson of Amherst, Ries of Cornell, Woodworth of Harvard and Cushing of Western Reserve, were two Jesuit scholastics, members of the association, Mr. Brock and Mr. Ahern.

An interesting series of five lectures on problems of astronomy were delivered in the mornings of the second week by Prof. Denis O'Sullivan of Philadelphia. The evenings were taken up by four excellent song recitals given by Mme. Elizabeth Pattee-Wallach of Virginia. This singer possesses a splendid contralto voice, which was heard to advantage in her rendering of the varied compositions which made up her recital.

This evening (Saturday) in the Auditorium there was presented by the Amateur Dramatic Company, for which the Summer School is well known, under the direction of James W. Brady of New York, the well known Irish ballad singer, the farce "Who is Who," by Williams, and the sketch, "Twenty Minutes Under An Umbrella," by Duberg.

The following are the most recent arrivals from New York: Mary Byron, Iloa Lente, Bertha H. Silverstein, Mary C. Cox, Katherine Cox, Professor and Mrs. E. O. Hovey, Otis Lente, Isabel C. Sloan, Charles E. Schlachter, Teresa A. Spencer and A. J. Spencer, Mrs. J. Twomey, the Misses Anna G. and Mary T. Cook of Brooklyn; the Misses K. A. and M. Condon and Anna McGowan of New York; M. A. Fitzpatrick and Clare, Rosa and Honora Desmond of Brooklyn.

There was a reception at the New York Cottage on Thursday evening. Songs were sung by Messrs. James W. Brady and J. Page; a mandolin solo by L. A. Benquert; duet, piano and mandolin, by Miss Bessie Jones and J. O'Connor. The talent was all furnished by New Yorkers.

CONTEST FOR $65 COSTS $200.

Heirs Fought Even Over the Jars of Fruit Which Mrs. Jacobus Left.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., July 13.—A legal battle involving an estate of $65, entailing an expense of $200 and netting $6.75 for the successful litigant was ended yesterday with the filing in the Orphans' Court of a report by Deputy Surrogate Charles F. Kocher on the exceptions taken to the accounting of the estate of Mrs. Mary A. Jacobus of Caldwell. The exceptions were made by Caroline Bowman, a relative of the deceased.

Mrs. Jacobus died in Caldwell on October 10, 1904, leaving no will, but numerous prospective heirs, who engaged in a squabble over her estate. William J. Gore, another relative, was appointed administrator and his troubles began early. Mrs. Bowman at once took exceptions to his accountings and their differences were taken into court, while the heirs watched for developments.

The entire estate had been appraised at $65, and among the articles enumerated were twenty-seven jars of fruit, valued at $13.50, together with a number of so-called family heirlooms. As to the jars of fruit the master reports with emphasis and dignity:

"There is evidence of the existence of sixteen jars, but not of twenty-seven. Some of the fruit was found to be spoiled and the remainder eaten before the appointment of the administrator. The administrator cannot be required to inventory articles which ceased to be in existence prior to his appointment, and this exception is overruled."

In the list was a piano bought seventeen years ago for $75.

While the litigation over this property was at its height some time ago the mutual recrimination between the next of kin became so acute that the master was compelled to call for the services of a constable.

NOW HELD FOR MURDER.

The Negro in Goshen Jail Wanted in South Carolina for Killing E. H. Fisher.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., July 13.—William Wagner, the South Carolina negro who was arrested in this city on Monday night on the charge of assaulting William Burns at Otisville, near here, in September, 1906, was to-day identified in Goshen jail as Fred L. Dunbar, wanted at Salley, S. C., for the murder of E. H. Fisher. The identification was made by B. Culbertson of Salley, who reached here to-day for that purpose. There is a reward of $700 for Dunbar.

The murder for which Dunbar is wanted occurred on the night of December 24, 1905. Chief of Police A. M. Black of Salley, accompanied by Mr. Fisher, went to the home of Dunbar for the purpose of arresting his brother, who was wanted on the charge of stealing a mule. Fred L. Dunbar and Jim Williams, another negro, were in the house, and when Chief Black and Fisher approached the negroes opened fire upon them. Fisher was killed and Black received a wound in the abdomen. Both the negroes escaped.

Jim Williams was afterward captured, has been tried and found guilty of murdering Fisher and sentenced to be hanged on Friday next, July 19. Dunbar will probably be taken back to South Carolina as soon as requisition papers can be prepared.

F. J. GOULD GIVES $1,000.

Helps Fund for a Chair in Modern Languages in a Southern College.

PETERSBURG, Va., July 13.—The Rev. John W. Eure of this city, agent of Randolph Macon College at Ashland, Va., who is raising a fund of $30,000 to endow a chair of modern languages in the college, has received a contribution of $1,000 from Frank J. Gould of New York. Accompanying the contribution is a letter to Mr. Eure from Mr. Gould, in which the writer says:

"After having travelled abroad and seen so many foreigners who speak either two or three languages it is very noticeable upon returning to America to see how few of us know any other language but the English."

CONTROL OF TELEGRAPH COS.

Texas's Railroad Commission Thinks the Anti-Pass Law Gives Jurisdiction.

AUSTIN, Tex., July 13.—The Railroad Commission asserts that it has authority under the anti-pass law which went into effect yesterday to assume jurisdiction over the rates of telegraph and telephone companies within the State. The question has been referred to the Attorney-General for an opinion.

Commissioner O. B. Colquitt holds that the anti-pass law is violated by the telegraph companies when they give a lower rate to newspapers for news matter than to other patrons.

Will Give Up Hunting for Walker.

NEW BRITAIN, Conn., July 13.—Officers of the Savings Bank of New Britain admitted to-day that they saw no hope of catching the missing cashier, William F. Walker, who disappeared early in the year with about $75,000 of the bank's funds. They announced that they will give up the search for him. At the annual meeting next week they plan to stop the hunt.

GERRY SOCIETY'S BIG BLUNDER

IT CARTS OFF FOUR WELL CARED FOR CHILDREN

And Takes Them to Court Without Notifying the Father—Agent Swears He Found Them in "Indescribable" Filth—Truth Found to Be Quite the Other Way.

Just after Thomas Murphy, a plumber's helper living at 737 Third avenue, had started for work last Thursday morning a patrol wagon drove up to the door and a policeman and a Gerry society agent got out and went up the stairs. Soon they came down with four of the plumber's helper's children. These were Agnes, aged 15; Julia, 13; Thomas, 12, and Francis, 8. There are three more, two boys and a girl, but they are older and all work out. One of the older boys ran out after the father and when he found him told of the taking away of the children.

"They've taken them to the Children's Court, they said," the boy told Murphy. The father had on his old working clothes and overalls, but there was no time to go home and change and he hurried to the Children's Court just as he was.

"'Twas no way to be dressed to go to court," he said yesterday, "but 'twas me childer they was after taking away."

At the court the father found that his four children were to be arraigned on a charge of being without proper guardianship. Agent N. Joseph Slicklen, who made the complaint, swore that he had found them "in filthy condition, in rooms of indescribable filth." It was also asserted that Murphy drank hard, that his wife was dead and that there was no one to take care of the youngsters. It was true, the plumber's helper said, about his wife being dead. She died twelve months ago after a year's "ailing." It was hard sometimes to do all he wanted to for the children since then, but they were always dressed and fed and seemed happy. Murphy has been employed by the same man now for twenty-two years, he says, so the part about being a drunkard he thought must be a joke.

The whole family were in court. The older girl, who works in a department store and sees to things when she gets home of nights, was there. Agnes, aged 15, a roundfaced, jolly girl with red hair, who looks after the housework and takes care of her little brothers and sisters in the day, was one of the prisoners. She didn't see why they should call the rooms "indescribably filthy," when she worked hard and willingly to keep them as clean as she could with the blasting going on near by and dust coming in all the time.

All the children looked clean and neat to those in the court. The statement is Slicklen's affidavit and the appearance of the children were hard to reconcile. So a probation officer was sent up to the flat, and meanwhile the children were paroled in care of the father until July 31. Usually the prisoners in such cases are turned over to the Children's Society while an investigation is made. The woman sent to the tenement reported that the rooms were cleaner than the average in tenements of the class. A different standard in such things reigns in Third avenue from that which obtains, say, in Madison avenue.

The plumber's helper sat in his kitchen last night smoking his pipe, while Julia helped Agnes get supper. "I've lived in New York ever since I came from the old country thirty-seven years ago," he said, "and I never knew I had an enemy in the world. Why did they back up the wagon to my house and disgrace the family, I dunno. I get my $15 every week and it goes for the children. I don't need much for myself. I guess they will tell you I abuse them—do I, girls?" The girls laughed at their father's joke.

"I don't know why somebody did this to me. My girls tell me two men came to the flat Wednesday. I was at work. Thursday the wagon came. Can they do that like that, now? It's too bad, the disgrace."

Mr. Murphy continued smoking vigorously at his pipe, with one eye on the stove, where the supper was cooking under the care of Agnes. He is a typical son of the old sod, with a brogue that cheers the heart and honest blue eyes.

"Do they think the girls don't keep the house clean enough?" he asked, looking about the five rooms which constitute the family home. "Well, they do the best they can, and we're all well and happy, aside from this, praise be! And don't they have to look into things a little before they run off with your childer like that—investigate, I guess they call it? 'Twould be easier for a poor man. He don't like to have his childer carted off in a wagon when he don't know about it."

Mr. Murphy took a long pull at the pipe and laid it down as Agnes called, "Almost ready, father." "Well, I'll not complain," he said. "Do I know who did this to me?" he repeated the question. "Now, maybe I do, I dunno. If I knew for certain I'd tell you, but maybe I'm wrong. I'll accuse no man. But why, now, do you think they done it?"

BEQUESTS OF FRANCIS T. WHITE

$23,500 in Benevolences—$10,000 to a Courteous Bank Cashier.

Charitable bequests amounting to $23,500 are made by the will of Francis T. White, filed for probate yesterday. The will contains other specific bequests amounting to $202,500, and the executors are directed to divide the residue into sixteen equal parts to be distributed among the heirs.

To the Cincinnati Orphan Asylum, the Cincinnati Union Bethel, the Children's Home, the Widows' Home and the Home for Aged Men, all in Cincinnati, Mr. White left $2,500 each. "As a slight token of my fellowship and interest" he bequeathed $1,000 to the Cincinnati Monthly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, and to the Indiana Monthly Meeting of the same society $10,000 to form a trust fund, the income of which is to aid the society's missionaries. He was a member of both meetings.

The only New York charity to benefit is the Children's Aid Society, to which he bequeathed $2,500.

Among the specific bequests is one of $10,000 to Harry P. Cooke, cashier of the Fourth National Bank at Cincinnati, "in consideration of his uniform kindness and courtesy to me and as a slight recognition of his faithfulness and devotion to the interests of the bank."

The other bequests are all to relatives, who include the testator's brother, Mordecai Morris White; his half brothers, Benajah and Allen S. White, and their wives and children; Mrs. Hannah A. White, the testator's stepmother, and several nephews and nieces. Mordecai Morris White comes in for one-quarter of the residuary estate, and three nieces, Frances A. Gates, wife of John Gates; Alice M. Cramp, wife of Theodore W. Cramp, and Helen L. Eustis, receive three-sixteenths each.

WILD RIDE IN RUNAWAY AUTO

Dr. Norris Wrecks His Machine to Escape Plunging Down a Deep Ravine.

POUGHKEEPSIE, July 13.—The details have just reached here of a thrilling ride down the mountain side in a runaway auto which was experienced several days ago by two residents of this city, Dr. C. N. Norris and his daughter, Miss Myrtle Norris at Haines Falls. For a mile the machine in which the two were riding pitched down a grade in many places of 45 degrees, punctuated by water breaks which hurled the machine into the air a foot or two at each break.

The road at the point where the runaway occurred winds down the mountain side on a steep grade for two miles and a half. Dr. Norris and his daughter had covered less than a third of this distance when they discovered that the brakes were not holding the machine, which was taking on speed. Dr. Norris had the wheel and was operating the brake lever, to which the reverse is also attached, so that he could not put on the reverse without releasing the brakes altogether, which would have been fatal.

For a mile the auto held its course down the mountain side by which time it was travelling at a bewildering rate. The father and daughter had a glimpse ahead of a huge bluff, known locally as Dead Man's Rock, which lies at right angles to the highway. On the other side of the road at this point is a ravine several hundred feet deep. This death trap has been the scene of several fatal accidents.

To prevent smashing into the rock or flying off into the gulch Dr. Norris ditched the machine. He and his daughter were thrown against a shelving rock which formed a table projecting from the mountain side. Miss Norris was sent catapult like over the face of the table, while her father was sent shooting under it into a bed of deep moss. Both are suffering severely from shock. The wrecked auto was shipped here to-day for repairs.

He didn't fully regain consciousness until yesterday, when he learned of the uneasiness caused by his absence.

Sues a Town for Killing His Dog.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., July 13.—Notice of legal proceedings against the town of Montclair was filed to-day by Michael Shanager, a resident of Glen Ridge, for the loss of his fine terrier dog which he alleges was unlawfully captured by the official dogcatcher of Montclair. Shanager learned of his loss yesterday and called at the dog pound to recover his pet to-day, but found that it had been killed in accordance with official regulations. He values the dog at $50.
