Qualifications for Maids of Honor.
From the Gentlewoman.
A girl who aspires to become a maid of honor usually intimates, usually through her parents, to the mistress of the robes that she would like to serve her Majesty in this capacity, and if she is a suitable candidate she is put down and submitted to her when a vacancy among the maids of honor occurs, or in the event of her majesty wishing to increase the number, which is at present limited to three.
A maid of honor must of course be a copy of established social position, though it is now not necessary, as it was once, that she should be of titled rank. A maid must be able to speak French fluently and should be able to converse in German, she must be an accomplished pianist and be able to read compositions at sight, and she must, it is almost unnecessary to say, be thoroughly educated and have travelled on the Continent. A good, well trained voice is a qualification.

DE WOLF HOPPER
with LOUISE DRESSER
in the Extravagant Funny Song Comedy
A Matinee Idol
OH! LISTEN TO THE BAND!
HOPPER scored in everything Hopper sang. He more than lived up to his reputation as the greatest musical comedy singer.—Joseph Blocher, Times.
HOPPER himself is the very design. A force that will carry it to success. Scarcely a Hopper song did not strike it.—Sun.
HOPPER, most amusing. It's a happy concoction with beautiful music, girls with and without, a lot of laughter and not a dull moment.—Herald.
HOPPER is a real summer hit. He and his company will be heard from in Broadway for many days to come.—American.
HOPPER is funny. The duet with Miss Dressler the pick of the show.—Tribune.
HOPPER appeared in Lew Fields's version of Offenbach's "Madame Favart" and contributed to serve many months on Broadway.—World.
HOPPER Reigned in "A Matinee Idol." Put every other comic song Broadway quite in the shade.—Chas. Darnton, Evening World.
