NEW YORK, 2; BROOKLYN, 0.

The Giants finished two lengths ahead of the Brooklyns on the Polo Grounds yesterday afternoon. Yet though only two games behind at the nine inning mark, the Brooklyn paddlers were nowhere since the fifth score. Just before they reached that way flags the Giants spurted and [illegible] the two length gap, which they maintained to the end. Seymour, Bridwell and Meyers put in the licks which gave the New York shell shooting ahead. Nearing the nine mile buoys the Brooklyns [illegible] spurt, but 'twas a flash in the pan. The referees found occasion to dislodge the tusslers from the ceremonies and sent them to the rest of the afternoon in the clubhouse. Senior Wrangler Dahlen was one of the exiles. Referee in chief Johnstone attended to him. Bridwell was the other certain party who did not agree an adverse decision in silence, and first Assistant Boss of the Field Moran gave him the hara-kiri sign.

Christy Crandall of the Gotham variety was a pace which the Brooklyns couldn't keep up with. Little Otey pitched one of the best games he has pitched since he has worn the Giants' spangles. He was in serious difficulties only once, and then, as at all other times when Demons were tugging at the bases, he nailed the opposing runners to the wall.

In a game which was dull on the whole there were several enlivening happenings. Snodgrass stole second in the third inning while Bucker was holding the ball. Nobody covered second until Snodgrass was on top of the bag and when McElveen did go home Bucker made a bad throw on which Snodgrass galloped to third. In the fourth inning the old Seymour and Bridwell singled, but he fled to Davidson, Merkle drew four balls and Meyers, who hits them when they're needed, was his usual reliable self in a single which landed two comrades at the plate.

Dahlen was evicted in the fifth inning and Bridwell in the eighth. The eighth was a spot round. Bridwell ran over to second and glove[illegible] Daubert's hit. He made a [illegible] transfer to his dexter hand and tossed home only to Meyers. Meyers said safe and Bridwell slammed his glove down. There were a few terse throbbing words and Bridwell got his congé.

Wheat forced Daubert. McElveen made a throw-out on which the New Yorks scored [illegible] and the Brooklyns unlimbered a ball strike at the front of the upper stand [illegible] and fell back into right field. From the way Murray went after the ball he seemed to think it was a home run anyway. He merely trotted after it. Wheat seemed [illegible] crushed in doubt too. He ambled leisurely around to third and if Murray had expected that he could have caught Wheat McElveen ran to second and past that stopped and then there was a good chance to catch him between the bases, the ball by that time having been fielded in [illegible] shoot. Had lost his wits apparently and McElveen was allowed to ramble home to second. It was a peculiar incident, all players being alert as a lot of sombnbulists over the simple thing of a ball striking a barrier and bounding back to the field. That such a long hard hit wasn't a home run was the horseshoe phase of it.

Rain threatened in the ninth when Brooklyn made a final struggle. T. Smith and Fritch fanned, but H. Smith scratched a hit. Dalton shifted the right side of the plate and cozened four balls from Crandall. Dahlen closed the matinee with a choppy grounder to Merkle.

GOLFING AT ARDSLEY CLUB

GREAT WINS SCORE MEDAL AND LOSES AT MATCH PLAY.

Charles Brown, White and Tiffany Capture Honors in First Set. An Instance Where Politeness Lost a Hole Off Time and Junior Players on Links.

After a lapse of twelve seasons there was an invitation tournament for men started at the Ardsley Club yesterday, with a smaller field than had been expected after seventy entries. A break in Wall Street prices and the over holiday tournaments were blamed for the non-appearance of many. The 6,100 yard course was in apple pie order and a breeze from the Hudson tempered the heat. On the links and in the clubhouse every participant had a good time and those who defaulted missed a pleasant outing. C. H. Arent, Saugkill, captured the score medal with 80 and was in luck, for the best men had not grown used to the climbs and descents of the back end of the course. At match play there were several lower cards.

A survival of old times was the square of earth on each big grass tee, recalling the period when mats though it easier to drive from dirt than from turf. Will Tucker, the professional, and Will Myers, the caddiemaster, had greetings for all, but of those who were swinging clubs hereabouts when the 1899 tournament was on the only starters in evidence were John B. Upham, M. S. Paton, Gerritt Smith and Dashiell Brandreth. Beyond Broadway the course is about as it was then, but at the start, where formerly were four holes on the Hudson's bluffs, now only two are there.

Two Saugkill scratch men put up the most talked about match—Charles Brown and Louis Myers. The former was out in 38 and won four of the first five holes. He was still up at the turn, but Myers went to the fifteenth, which they halved in 3, in even 4s and was but 1 down. Playing the sixteenth, Myers sliced the drive and was stymied by a tree which he hit on the second, but reached the green in 4. Brown, after a good drive, pulled his second somewhat into long grass. Some bystanders said they could point out the ball, but on a strict construction of rule 4 Brown refused their aid. Brown, Myers and the caddies searched for a full five minutes for it and Brown then gave up the hole. At that instant Myers found the ball and told Brown to play.

"No," repeated Brown. "I have given up the hole and that settles it."

Myers could not change Brown's decision and they drove from the seventeenth all square. It made no difference in the long run and Brown lost nothing by his politeness, for he had the new holes and Myers smashed. He did 38, 40—78, allowing 6 on the sixteenth, which would have been a 4 or 5, and Myers had 40, 41—81.

Tiffany, although 1 down at the turn, beat Arent by 4 and 2. The Powelton player had a 3 on the long seventeenth and 75 for the round. Tiffany won from White, who was 2 over Mabon at the turn and won by 6 and 4. The Ardsley man, who has the record of 72 for the extended course, was decidedly off his game. White had his long game in fine control, going out in 41 and
