WHITE SOX KNOCK OUT TWO HOME PITCHERS

With Their Own Hits and New York Errors They Have Easy Time.

RALLY BY HIGHLANDERS

It Creates Hope, but Walsh Comes In and Prevents Further Scoring.

The fact that the Highlanders' pitching staff is in a most undependable condition was emphasized yesterday when two twirlers picked by Wolverton were knocked out of the box by the versatile White Sox, who evened up for their defeat of the day before. However, the New Yorks got Walsh out of the way, and if he'll only stay out of the way to-day, the locals may win the series. The Bostons runners up drubbed Cleveland soundly and dropped them into the second division. The Detroits were beaten by the Washingtons, but nevertheless, owing to whims of percentage figures, moved up one notch. The Athletics kept the New Yorks out of the cellar by beating the Browns.

"Balks being bad form, we will not make any to-day." So ordered Gen. Callahan and Lieut. Gleason of the White Sox troop yesterday. That was one source of runs, of which the Highlanders were deprived. There were other obstacles between them and sufficient scoring, and they were beaten, 11 to 5. Six or seven balks would have won for the Highlanders, but little else would considering the speckled fielding of the home team and inability to do anything with Walsh after Lange had been batted out.

Lange was knocked from the box in the fourth inning, when the New Yorks did their only impressionable hitting. Callahan then requisitioned the ever ready Walsh, and from the moment this master craftsmen appeared it was a case for the New Yorks of come on boys and jump through the hoop. The New Yorks had rallied so strongly that it looked as if they would again overhaul and beat the leaders, but with the advent of the mastodonic wet ball expect they ran out of rallies.

In speed, hitting, variety of tactics cleverly employed, all that distinguishes a successful ball club, the White Sox excelled the locals. The Sox proved that they were human by making a few errors, but nothing like the quantity with which the Highland claussmen littered the field. They were wide-awake in taking advantage of New York errors, which defensive maladministration on New York's part was serious as said they ran bases with zeal and good judgment, and they wedged in base hits in a matter of fact as well as iterative way. They loomed up a fast and accurate ball club.

The White Sox made a charge in the sixth inning, which was as well sustained and effectively executed as any team has made use of around here this season. It consisted of a nice combination of hitting the ball out, laying it down on the grass for bunts and harrying the opposing infield and stealing bases while the New Yorks were wondering what was coming next. Three men who reached first stole second in quick succession, and the period of strategical action netted three runs and was the turn in the balance.

In the first inning Caldwell had just about enough on the ball to get it up to the plate. It floated up as round and big as a soap bubble and far more suited to the impact of wood. It sailed up invitingly and sailed the other way to safe spots with disconcerting frequency. Before Caldwell could find the plate he passed Rath. Laird flied out harmlessly. Callahan let go with a single to left and Bodie walked and filled the bases. Collins sent the abused ball rolling safely past Martin, which prod was good for two runs, and there was a breathing spell while Zeider fouled to Sweeney. Two more hits, Weaver and Sullivan making them, and both clean, and three more runs were in.

Caldwell was sidetracked with five runs having accrued from his pitching, and Quinn coaxed the disaster by striking out Lange. Daniels led off with a two bagger for New York, but all his mates could do was to leave him at third base. Quinn pitched effectively until the sixth inning, but suffered from errors in the third. Hartzell's bad throw landed Bodie at first and Martin didn't handle Collins's grounder expeditiously enough to throw that satellite in the Callahan constellation out. Zeider bunted and Quinn slipped going for the ball. Chase had to come in for it on the run, and when he turned for a quick throw to Simmons, covering first, he threw over Simmons's head. It was an excusable error, but let in two runs.

Lange's collapse occurred in the fourth and came on with suddenness. Cree dropped a hit in right centre and scored on a two bagger to the fence by Simmons. The latter took third on a wild pitch after Hartzell's scratch hit to right. Martin was thrown out at first and Simmons scored while Sweeney was being thrown out by Rath. Weaver's wide throw to first on Quinn allowed Hartzell to bring in a run. A pass to Daniels and Zinn's single to left filled the sanctuaries. Two of them were evacuated for the plate when Chase tapped a safe fly to centre. It came around to Cree again, but he was facing Walsh now. Walsh passed him, filling the bases again. Simmons ended the inning with a grounder to Weaver.

The Sox came back at Quinn as hard as the Highlanders had gone after Lange. Walsh lined a double to left in the sixth. Rath bunted. There was no chance to get him at first, but Quinn made a neat play by tossing to Hartzell, who touched Walsh out on the line. The repulse was only momentary. Rath, who stole second, scored on a hit by Lord. Lord stole second. Callahan bunted and stole second. Seeing that there was no speed in Sweeney's throws the Sox were skipping to second without tarrying a second. Bodie's single meant two more runs.

Warhop blanked the Sox for the rest of the inning and proved to be one pitcher the problem of solve. A run was made off him in the seventh on misplays. Weaver walked and Hartzell made a bad throw of Sullivan's sacrifice. It was so wayward that Weaver, an impulsive and speedy youngster, went to third. Rath's fly to Zinn was too close in for Weaver to try to score, but he stood poised on his toes, and when the throw in went between Sweeney's columnar supports he came on and reached the plate with a slide.

BASE RUNNING BEATS TIGERS.

Senator Performs Ty Cobb Feat Against Cobless Detroits.

WASHINGTON, May 22.—Moeller's daring base running, when he scored from second on a poor throw by Stanage, won the game against Detroit for Washington here to-day, 5 to 4. Timely hits by Milan and Knight gave the Nationals a lead early in the contest, but the Tigers tied it up in their half of the sixth, when Gainer tripled to deep left with the bases full.

Bob Groom allowed Detroit only five scattered hits, and but for rugged support would have scored a shutout. The victory over Detroit to-day put Washington back in third place.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 22.—The Cleveland team of the United States League has given up the ghost, principally because the ghost had a hard time walking with the team. W. L. Whether or not some other city would be given the franchise and would play out the Cleveland end of the schedule is not known.

MATHEWSON RESUMES MASTERY OVER REDS

Holds Them to Three Hits and One Run in Last Game of Series.

GIANTS WIN WITH EASE

Heavy and Timely Batting and Sharp Fielding—6 to 1 the Score.

The Giants completed a splendid trip yesterday by beating the Cincinnati Reds, making three out of five from their closest competitors. The Giants lost only two games in the West, went away in second place and came back with a fairly good hold on first place. The Brooklyns wound up a poor trip by losing in Chicago. The Phillies beat the Cardinals by one run, and the Bostons whitewashed Pittsburg. The Phillies took fifth place away from St. Louis, and the Brooklyns dropped to last place.

To-day's Schedule.

CINCINNATI, May 22.—Mathewson today resumed his mastery over the Reds. His fine pitching was a cogent reason for the defeat of O'Day's hopefuls in the fifth game of the series, a series in which the Reds, by taking the first two, were filled with a false hope, for the Giants, strong always at recuperating, polished off the locals handsomely in the next three. Their victory to-day was the most easily won game of the five. Behind Mathewson's pitching was steady and stanch fielding, and at times the fielding verged on the brilliant. Both sides took part in the excellent fielding, but with the bat the Giants had a practical monopoly. Not only was their batting strong, but timely.

Pube Benton, the usually efficient southpaw, who had the Giants on the hip in the first battle, assayed to repeat and fell by the wayside. He and Mathewson were both repeating, and as an encore performer the veteran outshone the younger boxman very much. Not a hit was made off Mathewson in the last six innings, and his work compelled applause from the most partisan of the rooters. It was the best pitching he has done this season.

Benton began the game at a race horse clip. Becker grounded to the infield and Doyle and Snodgrass whiffed their way to retirement. Mathewson's service in the first inning also was impressive. He pitched only four balls. Marsans hit the second one and was thrown out by Herzog. Severold lined the first one that came his way to Murray, and Hoblitzell took a poke at the first one and sent it bounding gently to Doyle.

In the second inning the Reds did their only scoring and then picked up a solitary count. Mitchell scratched an infield hit and was sacrificed to second by Egan. Esmond cut into the debate with a single, which brought Mitchell home. That was as near as the Reds came to bunching hits. Esmond was thrown out stealing by the tried and true Meyers.

Cincinnati's third hit was made by Marsans in the third inning. There were two out at the time, and Marsans reached third, when Doyle dropped Meyers's throw to prevent a steal. Mathewson took care of that situation by fanning Severold. So helpless were the redlegs for the rest of the game that not one of them reached first base. The pitching of the New York hurler was pronounced the best seen here this year.

The Giants rapped Benton smartly in the third inning and made two runs. Meyers inaugurated the promenade of the bags with a vitriolic clout. Fletcher put the Chief on third with a two bagger. A sacrifice hoist by Mathewson to centre scored Meyers. Becker performed a similar service for Fletcher when he rammed hit past Egan. Becker, by the way, batted hard against the Reds from the moment he took Devore's place in the series. Three hits were his portion to-day.

Before the Reds were aware of it in the sixth inning, the bases were groaning with their load of Giants and all before anybody was out. Doyle and Snodgrass hit safely, and Murray was hit by a pitched ball. Merkle made a sacrifice fly on which Doyle scored and the others moved up, a long drive to left. Herzog's sacrifice fly to Marsand was far enough out for Snodgrass to trot to the rubber.

In the seventh the Giants made one and in the eighth another. With two out in the seventh Becker singled, stole second and pulled up at the plate when Doyle poled safely on a hit and run device. Doyle's back being lame he was relieved by Groh. Benton's fumble of Herzog's bunt in the eighth, a steal and a healthy smash by Meyers provided the Giants with their sixth run. Having performed valiantly, Meyers took a vacation and allowed Hartley to collaborate with Mathewson.
