MARQUARD SLIPS IN SIXTH

Bates, With His Passion for Triples, Again Maker of Trouble.

The Giants are hovering persistently around the .500 mark, dropping to that percentage figure yesterday when they lost to the Reds, with which team they could only break even on the series. The Brooklyns made it three out of four from the Cubs and shot up to second place. They passed the Cubs. The Pirates took their fourth straight defeat in Boston and the Phillies beat the Cardinals and broke even with them.

Up to yesterday the Cincinnati Reds hadn't won two games in succession. They won their second in succession yesterday. They beat the Giants, 3 to 1, and both parts of their hitherto unaccomplished feat were at the expense of the Giants. There is no special significance in a team winning two straight and no great renown attached to the performance, per se, but in the case of the tailenders doing it to the champions just now it may be pathological as pertains to the ailing Giants.

The drive and vim and dash which carried the Giants along last season have been seen at only fitful intervals this year, and yesterday their lassitude at the bat was such that with one home run off Fromme they were done. Pallid biffins was again the source of their downfall. It is an old story that when a club isn't hitting it looks jaded and out of sorts, but it continues to hold good. In the field there was plenty of snappy talk and encouragement among the players, but the accursed potency of Fromme's pitching made a skeleton of the attack.

On the strength of Herzog's home run, which cruel fate ordained to transpire when the bases were Saharas of barrenness, the Giants paced along in front until the sixth inning, when the tenacious Reds meted out to Marquard the only punishment of consequence the Rube had to take. Marquard pitched capitally before and after taking, but one inning of backsliding is very likely to prove damaging when a team is operating on the skimpy increment of one run.

If the erratic Shafer hadn't made an error in the fatal inning and if Marquard hadn't made a wild pitch two runs might have been averted, but Private Bates who has a passion for three baggers; Gen. Tinker, likely at any time to deliver a jolting blow when the game hangs in the balance, Senor Marsans and Plain Mr. Clark up and beat the ball to unprotected points and rendered the Giants moribund.

Marquard extracted two pop flies from the then diffident Reds in the first inning after Becker had doubled. The Giants had an even better scoring prospect in the first. Devore promenaded and Shafer singled. While Burns was forcing Shafer, Devore skedaddled to third. He attempted to go home on Doyle's rap to Hobby, and was caught after a chase. With two still on bases Murray hit as far as Fromme and ended the inning.

Herzog flounced the ball into the left field cupola in the second, which titanic deed was a rift in a cloud of easy outs. The Giants hit the ball with some force in the third, but lasted only a short time for all that. Shafer tripled with one out, but was at third only a moment when Burns lined to Hobby. There wasn't time for Shafer to get back and he was doubled.

In the fourth and fifth the Giants went out five times on infield plays and once in that period hit a fly to the outfield. The Reds were fully as torpid until the sixth. Bates, the deceitful man, had fanned out in the first and flied out in the third, but his meekness fell away from him in the sixth and he poled a three bagger between Burns and Devore. The worst part of it was that nobody was out. Becker fouled to Meyers. Tinker hit without waiting and lifted a two bagger over Devore's head. Bates cantered home and only sharp fielding by Devore held Tinker at second.

Shafer booted Hobby's grounder, Tinker taking third. A short wild pitch and Fighting Joe raced home. Marsans scratched a hit to Shafer, on which, had Tinker been on third and Shafer been playing in, the former might have been caught at the plate. So much for theory. As for conditions, Hobby was on third and Marsans on first. Shafer threw Hobby out at the plate when Egan smote the ball, Grant walked and Clark hammered to right.

Murray, the sure shot of all outfield throwers, prevented more than one run on Clark's hit. Marsans scored, but Egan slid into the ball in the hands of Meyers. Meyers dropped the ball, picked it up and retagged Egan. Brennan said out, and the Reds made a riotous kick. Tinker, Egan and various and sundry others flew at Brennan, buzzing and gesticulating. Brennan yanked off his mask and pad and gave the excited Reds a straight from the shoulder talk. Maybe he didn't see that Meyers dropped the ball, but the chief said after the game that he kept Egan blocked off and that the latter wasn't on the plate when retouched.

The Reds had enough runs anyway and didn't protest the game on the ground that the additional run might have given them the moral impetus to go ahead and win to-day, Monday and forevermore. There's no telling what may prompt protests; these days, but for the Tinker men sufficient to the day were the fruits thereof. A single by Meyers in the eighth with none out and one by Doyle in the ninth with one out merely prolonged the consummation of the defeat.

FOUR STRAIGHT FOR BRAVES.

Send Pirates Away Downcast, Breaking Thirteen Year Record.

BOSTON, May 9.—The Braves downed the Pirates again to-day, the score being 5 to 4. It was a bitterly fought battle and the crew of stogie men that left here to-night was a sadly disappointed lot. The Stallings tribe by winning four straight made a little baseball history for themselves. They accomplished in four days what it took them all last season to do, and for the first time since 1909 won a series from Pittsburg.

LUDERUS HITS IT OVER WALL.

Man on Base at Time and Phillies Beat Cardinals, 5 to 1.

PHILADELPHIA, May 9.—Luderus hit the ball over the right field wall with one on base in the seventh inning of to-day's game and the Phillies defeated St. Louis in the final of the series, score 5 to 1. St. Louis scored in the first on a base on balls, an out and a single. The Phillies lost a chance to score in the first when Knabe tried to take three bases on a two base hit. Steele was effective except in the seventh. Alexander pitched splendid ball throughout, allowing only two hits.

Ineligible This Week, Not So Next.

Poly Prep's regular and substitute first basemen are ineligible to play ball for one week or more beginning yesterday. They failed in two studies last week, which puts them out for one week. If they pass these subjects next week they will be allowed to play again. Poly's eligibility rules in this respect are different from those of any other school in Brooklyn.

THREE OF FOUR FOR DODGERS OVER CUBS

Triples by Smith, Miller and Stenzel Play Leading Role in 7 to 5 Victory.

SECOND PLACE NOW THEIRS

Pierce, Former Giant, Southpaws Unsteadily—Ebbets Lets In 3,000 Youngsters.

Three baggers by Red Smith, Otto Miller and Charley Stengel, coupled with unsteadiness on the part of Southpaw Pierce and glaring errors by Archer and Phelan, produced another Brooklyn victory over the Cubs at Ebbets Field yesterday, score 7 to 5. Smith's triple sent home two Dodgers who had received bases on balls in the first inning. Red following them to the plate when Phelan made a miss of Mitchell's long throw from the score board. Miller's three ply wallop sent home Fisher, who had doubled in the fourth, while Stengel's triple smash in the seventh yielded the circuit as Archer missed Evers's relay to the plate.

Pierce, a former Giant, was a bloomer in Chicago's box. He didn't finish the first period, but before Reulbach relieved him the Dodgers had amassed four runs, which kept the Cubs trailing the rest of the journey. Off Reulbach the Brooklyns made only two safe drives, those bunched by Fisher and Miller, while they solved Humphries three times in the last two periods. Seven base hits summed up the Dodgers' stick work, as against nine by the Cubs, seven of which were driven to places of safety by Saier and Bridwell, the latter making four in as many trips to the pan.

Stack didn't appear to have much speed during the first two innings he pitched for Brooklyn, so Dahlen lifted him and substituted Curtis. The latter was a puzzle until the seventh round, when a bangling error by Cutshaw, which prevented a double play evidently rattled Curtis so that with a series of free tickets he forced home two runs. After that the Cubs died hard, but the odds were too much for them.

More than 8,000 school boys and girls were admitted free to the upper tier of the grand stand. Perhaps 6,000 regular fans paid to see the fun. The combined vocal efforts of this queer gathering served to rattle the players of both teams, for the yelling was incessant, whether the Brooklyns were at the bat or in the field. President Ebbets was requested to admit 24,000 children all at once, but he fought for a compromise, with the result that two more days will be named for the entertainment of the 16,000 who had to remain away.

The game was a thriller in many respects. It bristled with trying situations and sensational plays, and when the Brooklyns left the field in triumph, having won three out of four from the haughty Evers crew, fans old and young went home rejoicing. The victory put the Dodgers in second place. A double play by Cutshaw and Daubert practically settled the Cubs in the first inning.

Four runs for Brooklyn were posted quickly on the huge blackboard. Pierce, who had lots of smoke, couldn't control it and walked Stengel and Cutshaw. Mitchell made a superb catch of Hummel's tremendous clip to deep left and Wheat fanned. On a short wild pitch Stengel dashed for third and Archer pegged the ball to Phelan. But the peg was low and the ball got away from the Cubs' third baseman, Stengel rushing home and Cutshaw scooting to third. Daubert also walked and Red Smith got in a fierce drive along the left foul line, the ball rolling clear to the wall. Cutshaw and Daubert counted and Smith, who had stopped at third, resumed his journey to the plate when Phelan let Mitchell's throw bound out of his clutches. Fisher singled to left and Evers promptly benched Pierce. Reulbach pitched one ball to Miller, when Archer cut down Fisher's attempted steal.

The Cubs came right back with a brace of runs in the second inning. Stack walked Phelan and Saier put his clubmate on third with a solid base hit to right, after which he stole second. Evers's short fly was easy for Wheat, but Bridwell singled to centre and both Cubs counted. Smith then retired Archer and Reulbach on slow grounders.

Evers leaped three feet off the ground, caught Archer's wild throw with one hand and headed off Miller's steal in the last half of this inning. Daubert also distinguished himself when he stopped a leg breaker from Schulte in the third inning, threw to Fisher, getting Clymer, who had gone to second, and then hustled back to the bag in time to receive Fisher's return for a double play.

Saier played a neat trick on Field Umpire Emslie in Brooklyn's third. Two were out when Wheat walked. Archer snapped a throw to Saier. Wheat slid back to the bag in safety, but Saier pulled Zach's foot off the sack and Emslie said "out." Dahlen kicked until he was purple in the face, but Emslie, chewing gum as usual, waved the Dodgers' leader away.

With two down in the fourth period Fisher hit the right field wall and took two bases. Miller sent him home with a terrific three bagger over Mitchell's head, whereupon Evers jawed Reulbach for some unknown reason. Bridwell was deprived of a possible triple in the fifth inning when Smith made a back handed stop close to the bag and barely missed getting the runner with a great throw. A hair raising catch by Stengel of Reulbach's liner in the same period prevented further damage.

The Cubs, who had solved Curtis for one hit, began to treat him roughly in the seventh inning, also treating the crowd to a big scare. Saier opened with a single, but in trying to stretch it Hummel's fine throw to Cutshaw nailed him. Evers received a pass and raced to third on Bridwell's sharp base hit to right. Archer grounded to Fisher and the Cubs should have been blanked then and there. But Cutshaw dropped Fisher's throw and lost a double play.

This error clearly upset Curtis, who couldn't locate the plate for Ward Miller, batting for Reulbach, and Evers was forced home. Clymer also received a ticket and Bridwell trotted in. Daubert scooped Schulte's rattler and retired Archer at the plate, and Good, hitting for Mitchell, forced Schulte.

A mighty cheer went up when the Cubs had been retired, one run behind the Dodgers, and there was increased excitement in the last half when, with Humphries in the box and two down, Stengel lifted the pill over Clymer's head for three bases. Evers relayed Clymer's throw to the plate, but the ball went through Archer, and Stengel sprinted home.

After Cutshaw had gobbled Phelan's liner in the eighth Saier doubled to left and reached third on Evers's scratch two bagger. Hummel losing a fly ball in the sun. Saier scored on Bridwell's fourth safe hit, a drive to right, and Evers stopped at third. Bridwell, however, was caught trying to reach second on the throw to Smith and Archer was third out on a fly to Wheat. Evers openly scored Bridwell for reckless base running, for if the latter had remained on first the Cubs' manager would have tied the score on Archer's out.

Wheat increased Brooklyn's total to seven in the last half when he beat out a hit to Evers, went to second on Daubert's sacrifice, took third on Smith's short single and scored on Fisher's out, on which Smith was doubled at the third corner.

Curtis put the screws on in the ninth inning and when Schulte ended the game with his second strikeout the Cubs looked anything but happy.

Same Old President, but Brand New Circuit Opens Up To-day.

The United States Baseball League, which was so short lived last season, has been reorganized, and President Witman on his return from a circuit of inspection yesterday announced everything in readiness for the season, which will open to-day with the following schedule:

New York in Newark.
Brooklyn at Washington.
Baltimore at Lynchburg.
Philadelphia at Reading.

There is to be a parade at Newark prior to the opening of the league, and the players will be taken to the grounds in automobiles at 2 o'clock.

Four Reversals on One Play—Record?

ST. LOUIS, May 9.—Umpires O'Loughlin and Ferguson reversed one decision four times in the Athletics-Browns game to-day. If it is not an umpirical record there is no way of proving the fact. In the seventh, with two out, Oldring hit to Austin. It seemed that the latter's throw beat Oldring. Ferguson called him out, then said "Safe" as the Browns started to leave the field. After a protest Chief Umpire O'Loughlin called Oldring out. As the Browns walked off again the Athletics rushed on Silk. He became flustered, said "Safe" again and ordered the Browns back on the field. They were ahead, so joined in the universal laugh.

DETROIT, May 9.—The New Yorks played rings around the Detroit Tigers in to-day's game, outbatting and outfielding them at every stage and winning by a 9 to 0 score, the second shutout by the Chance men during the series. Willett was hammered hard and retired at the end of the seventh inning. Thirteen hits were made by the visitors, whereas the Tigers got only seven and spilled six errors. Warhop started to pitch, but wavered in the third and was replaced by Russell Ford.

Detroit was not dangerous at any stage of the game, the two best chances to score coming in the third and seventh frames, when they succeeded in getting two on with no one down, but the hit that would have scored a run was not forthcoming.

The first ball Willett pitched hinged Daniels on the arm and immediately afterward Bert stole second, Stanage's throw being high. On Wolter's infield out Daniels took third. Hartzell bounded a slow one to Crawford and Daniels scored.

Two errors and as many whacks netted a pair of tallies for the New Yorks in round three. Warhop knocked a high one to Gibson, who very gracefully allowed it to filter through his paws, the pitcher taking second, where he was held while Willett threw out Daniels. He scored, however, on Wolter's single to centre. With Hartzell down, Cree's double down the right field foul line scored Wolter. Gibson gave an exhibition of juggling and Cree reached third, where he died when Chase lifted to High.

The fifth inning for the visitors was the fat one. They scored four runs on three hits and a like number of errors. Wolter rolled one to Louden, who gummed it up, and the runner beat the throw. Hartzell bounded one to Deal, who heaved the sperold over Crawford's head, Wolter scoring and Hartzell easily reaching third. Cree rolled to Crawford and Hartzell was killed between third and the plate. Cree, however, reached second and was safe on third when in an attempt to catch him stealing Deal dropped the throw. Chase waited and walked and took second on Sweeney's single to left, which scored Cree. Here Chase and Sweeney pulled a double steal with such ease that Stanage made no attempt to stop either of the thieves. Midkiff hit to Louden, but Crawford was off the bag and the third bagger won the race to first with Louden on a slide into the sack. Chase scored and Sweeney took third. On a double steal by Sweeney and Midkiff, the catcher scored. Stanage's throw was a bad one and Midkiff tried for the third corner, but was out, Louden to Deal. Derrick poked a single into the left meadow, but Ford fled to Veach.

Three hits in the sixth round produced one run for the visitors. With Daniels out to Bush, Wolter beat a bounder to Louden. On the hit and run Bush was pulled over and Hartzell hit through his position, Wolter going to third, from where he counted on Cree's single to right.

The ninth run came over in the ninth. With two men down Midkiff beat out a bunt and took third on Zamloch's poor throw through Crawford. Sam made a very poor return of the ball to the infield and the runner kept on until he reached the plate. The Tigers had men on in all but two innings, and had twelve left.

Joke Bet on Bostons Nets One Man $500

BOSTON, May 9.—Four straight defeats of the Pirates at the hands of the Braves cost one Boston man $500 because of a playful bet he made when Pittsburg came to town. After the first game a friend remarked to him that he wouldn't be surprised to see Boston win the series.

"I'll bet you 100 to 1 they don't," said the second man.

"Just for the fun of the thing," the first man said. "I'll take the short end to the extent of $5."

At 5:20 o'clock this afternoon the short end man left the Walpole street park $500 richer. Another man had resolved never again to bet on a ball game.

EARLY RALLY PROVES ENOUGH.

Browns Score Five Runs in First Inning; Athletics Total Only Three.

ST. LOUIS, May 9.—A batting rally by the Browns in the first inning in which five runs crossed the plate was enough to put to-day's game with the Athletics away safely. The score was 7 to 3 in favor of St. Louis.
