PAVING EXPENSES CAUSE OF PROTEST

Mr. Shonts Declares Railways Company Bears Too Great Share of Burden.

CITY SHOULD HELP, HE SAYS

Protest against the burden of expenditure for street paving borne by the New York Railways Company, operating the New York surface lines, entailed by its franchises, is a feature of President Shonts's report of operations for the year ended June 30.

"The very large expenditure for street paving in the past and at present is extraordinarily burdensome and is exhausting the funds of the company to such a degree that we find ourselves unable to carry out plans that could otherwise be accomplished to build up the physical property of the system, to improve the character of equipment and to better the street car service to the public," he says.

"These burdensome paving expenses were imposed upon the street railway companies at a time when the physical conditions and uses to which the pavement is put were radically different from those existing today. For instance, most of the paving obligations were arranged for and imposed at the time of horse traction. The arguments and reasons given for requiring a pavement clause in the franchises were largely based on the fact that the horses wore out the pavement. The fundamental reason for imposing this burden on the railway companies has been removed and the conditions of street traffic, pleasure conveyances and trucking, both automobiles and horse drawn vehicles, are continually wearing out the pavement, which is paid for by the railways company and not in any way paid for by the parties who are actually making use of it.

"Spring and subsequent to the severe snowstorms of the winter just passed the railways company, by extraordinary physical efforts and by the expenditure of large sums cleared the snow from streets upon which our tracks are laid. This work, performed at the railways company's expense, was not of any advantage to the railways company, but did provide a space in the streets over the railroad tracks, which was the only space available for vehicular traffic, even for the use of the Fire Department."

Says City Should Pay.

The company got no return for this large expenditure, says President Shonts. He proposes that the city be responsible for the paving in the streets, and that the company pay a reasonable proportion. At present, he says, the company frequently has no voice in the expenditure of its money for pavement.

Operations for the year showed losses from the previous year in gross and net. Gross revenue was $13,560,537, a decrease of $204,320 from the previous year. After paying interest on the first real estate and refunding bonds a balance of $1,116,611 remained, a decrease of $65,327. Including the surplus in the treasury on June 30, 1913, the amount available for payment of interest on the adjustment bonds was $1,184,034, a decrease of $52,230. The surplus for the year after payment of $1,112,678 interest was $83,486, including $12,129 net income from operation of Williamsburg Bridge local cars.

The combined cost of claims for the year and some from the old receivership was 6.4 per cent. of the gross passenger revenues, against 6.6 per cent. last year. The volume of litigation, however, is on the increase. Plaintiffs won 34 per cent. of cases brought against the company. The company has set aside 5 per cent. of gross revenue for accident reserve until it can determine from experience that it needs less. The company has gone in for its own insurance under the workmen's compensation act.

"While the decrease in gross passenger revenue during the past year has been disappointing to your management," says President Shonts, "the causes contributory thereto are so evidently transient that they cannot be said to have any permanent bearing on the general situation. For the first six months period of the present fiscal year, during which the weather conditions were practically the same as the previous year, there was an increase in both gross and net earnings and in the number of passengers carried. Then followed the severe weather conditions and heavy snowstorms of February and March and the marked low temperatures which prevailed from April to June of this year. Added to this was the general business depression throughout the country, which had its effect, as did also the many interruptions to the service caused by the city's construction of the new subways.

"When people are thrown out of employment their regular daily travel to and from work ceases and when hard times prevail and the exercise of economies becomes necessary pleasure trips and shopping expeditions are naturally curtailed and travel suffers in consequence."
