"A Doll's House," one of the most famous of the works of Henrik Ibsen, the Shakespeare of Norway, was presented at Foster's last evening before a large audience by the clever comedienne, Miss Clara Tropp, supported by Mr. Frederic Bryton and a strong company. "A Doll's House" is a sermon on the stage, a sermon that leaves a deep impression on one. It is the story of a husband who holds himself far above his wife in intellect, looks upon her as a doll and treats her as such, even though his love for her is deep; of a wife who is content to live the life of a doll through eight years of married life; of the sad awakening when the husband learns of a forgery the wife commits and of the separation of the man and wife, she leaving him and their children to go to her old home. She committed the forgery to secure money with which to take her husband to Italy in an effort to win back his health, but that fact he never learned, and supposed the money came as a legacy from her father. She had her secrets from him, and he had his secrets from her, and the inevitable sad end came. They both made their mistakes and were not strong enough, broad enough or wise enough to see their errors and to forgive. The play has many strong ingredients, and Miss Tropp and her company were fully equal to every occasion. Miss Tropp has been seen in Des Moines several times, but never before she has had a chance to show her wonderful talents. She has certainly won new honors for herself in this city. Mr. Bryton, her leading man, is a finished actor, and he filled the difficult part of the wronged husband most thoroughly. A pleasant feature of the play was the acting of Mr. Charles Ryan, a Des Moines man, and a brother of Dr. Ryan of this city. He filled the part of Dr. Rank to perfection, and little could be said in criticism. Mr. Ryan is making a remarkable success for a young actor, and much may be expected of him in the future. Following "A Doll's House" a lively little one act comedy, "A Truant Spouse," was presented. In this Miss Tropp showed her ability as a comedienne, and made a telling hit. Her singing of Kipling's song, "On the Road to Mandalay," was a most pleasing incident. Miss Tropp and her company returned to Des Moines on Nov. 18. At the matinee "A Doll's House" will be given, and in the evening a new play will be staged. She will be given a hearty welcome.—Iowa State Register.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

The following was contributed: Last Monday afternoon as F. S. Moulton was starting for town with a load of hogs and had just turned the corner to go down the railroad track one of the hogs got a little unruly and made a dash at the spring seat completely lifting it and Mr. Moulton entirely from the wagon and landing them beside the road. Mr. Moulton lost hold upon the lines, and hogs and horses still kept on toward town at a good lively gait until near T. P. Thompson's place. They were finally captured by Mr. Bently and turned back when this same hog concluded she had rode far enough jumped out of the wagon and laid down beside the road until Freeman and Mr. Moulton came back to town with the others and came back after her ladyship. After all had been landed safe in the stock yards Mr. Moulton finds himself quite badly bruised besides two broken ribs and now if the parties that took the spring seat from the road side where he left it to over take his runaway team will return the seat to Mr. Moulton or leave it at his place he will be very much obliged.
