DONOVAN SHINES AFTER FIRST BATTLE IS LOST

New York's hopes for a first division berth were jolted rudely yesterday when the Yankees lost both games of a double header to Washington, even though it took the Senators eleven innings to down Ray Fisher. The Tygers improved their chances by outslugging the White Sox, as it was an off day for the Red Sox and the Athletics. Cleveland won easily from the Browns.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—The Yankees lost both games of to-day's double header with the Senators, scores 4 to 1 and 3 to 2. The second went eleven innings.

Bill Donovan relieved Brown after the opener was lost. He shut out the Senators in the last four innings and held them to one lone hit. Furthermore he fanned six men, three of them in a row, in the seventh. Only one man got to second.

Howard Shanks proved Ray Fisher's Nemesis in the second game. With one down he got a lucky triple through Cree. Gandil tied the score when he sent a long sacrifice fly to High. With one gone in the eleventh Fisher walked Foster. Singles by Milan and Shanks sent the winning run over. The scores:

By WILLIAM B. HANNA.

James Lavender had a super-spitball which writhed like a lariat or had the effect of so doing as it came up to the New York batters at the Polo Grounds yesterday afternoon. His convolute pitching was so tricky, so deceptive, that the Giants didn't make a hit off it, and in the first game of a double header they were shut out by the Cubs, 2 to 0. This was the only no hit game of the afternoon.

There some non-hitting in the second game, but this was a matter of individuals, not clubs, and much better hitting by the Giants than by the Cubs. The home team won this one easily. The score was 7 to 1. Rube Benton earned his Gotham brackets, had the Cubs in chancery all the way, and with men on bases showed his mettle by effective, steady work.

Neither game was tense with uncertainty nor crackled with excitement, but there was much in a matter of fact baseball way, in excellence of execution, which was worth seeing, and again the play was discolored with a few boots and hammer headed thinking. Lavender's pitching was the big development of the first game and of the afternoon. It was meritorious pitching, decidedly so. It accomplished its no hit result chiefly on its own merit as distinguished from poor vision and swinging by opponents.

In order to weather the whole nine innings unscotched, unscathed and unblemished, Lavender had the help of fine fielding in the seventh inning, in which the Giants landed the hardest. Yet he was in rare trim and had the ball whipping through, breaking at an invisible point in the air near the batsmen, then taking a sharp tangent and darting under the New York bats. In brief he had lots on the ball and was no luckier than is any pitcher to get a no hit game.

Merkle was the only man who reached first base. He did that twice. Fisher put him there in the second inning by fumbling his grounder. It was an error plainly enough. It wasn't a hard chance. Fisher had to move for the hit, but only a step or two, wasn't hurried and had time to steady himself for the scoop, which came on no difficult mound. In the eighth Merkle walked and he alone of the Giants rested his spikes on the bases. He reached third in the eighth inning on a walk and two outs.

Larry Doyle of all the Giants leaned against the damp compelled breaks the hardest. In the seventh inning he hit so far to right centre that Williams had to rush to get under the drive and then he did an acrobatic flip flap from the momentum of his rush. He held the ball as he tumbled backward in the distant purlieus of the plantation. In the same inning Saier and Lavender had to move quickly to get Robertson on a ground ball, and Zimmerman retired Grant by the closest of margins after a good stop back of the box. The Giants were close to a hit three times in that inning. In the others only ordinary fielding was needed to retire them when they weren't striking out.

There was another pitcher in the game, however, and his work was first class. Rube Schauer handled the New York side of the serving capably. He had the unusual privilege for him of abiding on the platform the whole game and showed very little flightiness. The first score off him was a home run of endless length by Williams. The tall, spare and winged foot Cub did what Ty Cobb did this season, hit on the fly into the area abutting the right wing of the grand stand. The other Cub tally was evolved from a fielder's choice, a hit by Fisher and Schauer's wild pitch. The Rube was pitted against no hit pitching and even then didn't look bad by comparison.

Four singles reverberated from the Giants' bats in unbroken succession in the first inning of the second game, and that with two men out and back on the settee. Robertson lined to right, Doyle bunted, Merkle lined to right and also Fletcher. Two runs. Robertson, swiftest of footsmen, defied Jack Murray's famous arm and went from second to the plate on Merkle's single to the red head's demesne. He won the test. The throw was wide and Dave not only scored but stayed up while doing it.

Ragged pitching by Vaughn and ragged fielding by supporting Cubs, with the hefty hitting of Chief Meyers, sent the Giants steadily ahead. Benton's toughest inning was the fourth, his only trying one, in fact, and in that one he came through with credit. Fisher singled, Schulte struck out, Zim singled and a pass to Saier filled the bases with one out. Bresnahan yanked Williams and put in Knisely, a right handed hitter. Pete grounded to Grant, and while he was being thrown out Fisher came home. Grant fumbled, else he would have had a double play and prevented scoring.

Karl Adams pitched the eighth for the Cubs. Vaughn was demounded to allow Schultz, erstwhile Dodger, to hit for him. The Giants made it warm for Karl. Doyle, Fletcher and Meyers drubbed him for doubles and Brainard wedged in a single. The potpourri convoked two tallies. The scores:
