Yankee Owners Sue Johnson for $500,000 and Charge He Has Tried to Drive Them Out of Baseball

SUE JOHNSON FOR $500,000 DAMAGES

Yankee Club Owners Return to the American League Fight with New Complaints.

HOW THEY WERE INJURED

Produce Letter Written by Ban Saying They Should Be Retired from Baseball.

By WILLIAM B. HANNA.

Legal action for $500,000 damages was set in motion by the New York American League Baseball Club yesterday against Ban Johnson, president of the American League. That was only one of three new complaints brought by the Yankee club as a further and by all odds the biggest and most far reaching move so far made in this bitter fight in the younger major baseball organization.

In presenting its action for half a million dollars damages the New York club charges, among other things that one of the injurious acts of Johnson was to influence the New York National League club to refuse permission to the Yankees to use the Polo Grounds after this year, also making public the plans of the Yankees for a new site and thus preventing the acquiring of that site on advantageous terms.

Such in the main is the purport of the first action. Continuing with legal fire calculated to make Ban and those allied with him sit up and take more serious notice than they yet have been called on to do in a suit in which the Yankees, Colonels, Jacob Ruppert and T. L. Huston, seek to restrain Johnson from "paying to himself or from receiving out of the funds of the American League" any compensation as president, secretary or treasurer.

Suit No. 1 is against Johnson and five clubs lined up with him in the American League rumpus, to wit: Philadelphia, Washington, Detroit, Cleveland and St. Louis. It is to prevent—restrain, to use the legal phraseology—Johnson and the "loyal" five from doing any further acts in aid of what is said to be the purpose and plan of the defendant Johnson to injure the plaintiff and to drive it out of baseball. The quoted clause is from a statement issued yesterday by the aroused and fighting Colonels.

No Quarrel With Giants.

The Yankee owners made it plain yesterday that they had no quarrel with the Giants and sought none. The man they are after, and after him with all the resources at their command, is Johnson. The big fight is on Johnson, of whose methods and administration the Colonels heartily disapprove.

Johnson, the Yankee club alleges, conceived the idea of driving it out of business and charges that the suspension of Mays, the influence brought to bear to prevent the Yankees from using the Polo Grounds next year and premature exploitation of plans for a new site were to that end. In support of which, the Yankee club declares it has in its possession a letter written by Johnson which says regarding Ruppert and Huston:

"It is my judement that they should be retired from our organization. . . . I am sure other people can be interested in the proposition and that a satisfactory arrangement can be made with the present owners of the New York National League club."

This letter is dated August 6, 1919, and shortly after the Mays controversy arose.

In the second suit the New York club asks for a judgment requiring Johnson to account for and restore with interest all sums he may have taken as salary since the annual meeting of the American League in New York last December.

The complaint recalls happenings of December, such as the refusal of Johnson to proceed with the order of business as prescribed by the constitution in the matter of the election of president, secretary and treasurer. It states that there has been no vote of the league on the subject of salary at or since that time, but nevertheless that Johnson has continued to pay himself $30,000 a year salary.

Usurpation of Power.

Usurpation of power and authority is charged, and that resistance by the Yankee people to such a course has brought retaliatory efforts from Johnson to drive the club out of baseball.

The complaint cites Ban's refusal to comply with the many resolutions of the Board of Directors in 1919 and prior to the annual meeting of that year; his refusal to disclose the nature of the arrangements which he had made for the selling or leasing of the privilege of giving out news of events on the ball grounds of the various clubs; his refusal to disclose the alleged arrangements which he claimed to have establishing a contractual relation between himself and the American League in relation to the offices of president, secretary and treasurer; his refusal to comply with the resolution of the Board of Directors annulling his suspension of Mays; his utterances through the press threatening to punish the Board of Directors for the action taken by them; his refusal to submit a tabular statement of the games won and lost by each club during the season of 1919; his refusal to recognize that the New York team had finished in third place and that its members were entitled to third place money; his blocking of the appointment of a chairman for the national commission in view of the fact that Col. Ruppert was one of the nominating committee for the American League; and his effort to prevent the annual meeting of the league from being held in New York pursuant to the call of the Board of Directors.

Attached to the complaint are resolutions adopted by the Board of Directors on December 10, 1919, in which it is resolved that Byron B. Johnson "has not only not performed but has broken the conditions of his employment by the American League and has forfeited all rights to compensation for his supposed services as president, secretary and treasurer, and that any action continuing or electing Johnson as an official of the league or continuing compensation to him would be detrimental to the interests of the league and to the game of baseball."

In his suit against Johnson and his friendly five clubs Messrs. Ruppert and Huston would have Johnson restrained from continuing to act as president, secretary, treasurer or a director of the league; from being paid therefor, and they would have the defendants restrained from refusing to recognize as valid the action of the board of directors in annulling the suspension of Mays.

No money damages are sought from the clubs of the Johnson coterie, but the complaint alleges that they are under the domination of Johnson, also the control, and that the action taken by their representatives since the annual meeting of last year has been "for the purpose of enabling the said Johnson to be free to proceed with his aforesaid purpose and plan to injure the plaintiff and to usurp to himself all the powers of the American League, contrary to the plain provisions of its said constitution."

The appointment of a receiver for the funds of the American League and for an injunction during the pendency of the action is asked for.

Justice Vernon M. Davis yesterday signed an order for the taking in Cleveland of the testimony of James C. Dunn, president; Walter McNichols, secretary, and E. S. Barnard, business manager, of the Cleveland club, and requiring the club to produce for inspection its minute books, stock books and other records concerning the financial interest of Ban Johnson in the Cleveland club and concerning his participation in its affairs.

Frances S. Appleby of Columbia University added another game to his list of victories in the Eastern Class A amateur 14.2 balkline billiard tournament at the Amateur Billiard Club last night. He defeated Edward W. Gardner, the former national champion, by 100 to 12.

Appleby played an erratic game, but it was much superior to that of his veteran opponent. He made a host of beautiful shots but on several occasions he used poor judgment, and two or three times his execution was not much better than that of a novice.

Near the end of the contest Appleby got his eye and arm working well and clicked off 114 points and came within 8 of equaling the record for the tournament made by McAllister.

After he had made his run he surprised the spectators by attempting a difficult one cushion shot instead of playing an apparently easy open one.

Appleby averaged 11.12-24. Gardner's high runs were 16, 15 and 10, and his average 8.

T. Henry Clarkson, Boston's representative, defeated Edgar T. Appleby, the Columbia University student, in the afternoon game by a score of 300 to 123. The Bostonian disposed of his opponent in twenty innings. It was Clarkson's second victory following three defeats.

Appleby got off to a good start. In the opening innings he clicked off 44 and held command until the eleventh session. In that inning Clarkson made a run of 32 and took the lead. The score at this stage was 189 to 91. In the sixteenth Clarkson cinched the game by making a run of 77. The Boston player was in perfect stroke throughout the game.

The match was the keenest thus far played in the tournament. Both contestants were in excellent form and each executed some difficult shots. The contest lasted fourteen frames with Shongood returning the best high run. His best cluster was 21 balls, while the winner's was 18.

Shongood played a brilliant game at the start but fell off as the contest progressed.
