The ceremony was performed in the marriage license bureau by a local justice in the presence of a few friends of the couple, who accompanied them from New York. New Frolic Has Chic Star in Mlle. Spinelly

Paris Revue Artist Wears Few Clothes, Sings and Dances Well.

For the opening of the second edition of the "Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic," presented Monday and early yesterday on the New Amsterdam Roof, there was offered as the piece de resistance Mlle. Spinelly of Paris, modestly described in the advance notices as "the celebrated Parisian revue artiste, the actress with the irresistible personality and charm, whose praise has been sung by the most prominent critics of two continents."

"Mlle. Spinelly's gorgeous gowns," the gifted writer had specified, "threaten to set a new standard in women's wear. She and all that goes with her must be seen to be appreciated and absolutely defies description."

There is something in that too. For it is less what goes with Mlle. Spinelly than what contrives to get on very well without her. There are moments in her performances when, viewed as she prances away, all that goes with Mlle. Spinelly seems to have already gone before. Then when she faces about suddenly and advances to the plaudits of the multitude the mind—even if the beholder imagines himself not to have that type of mind at all—is set irresistibly to the problem of trying to figure out how she does it.

The man who invented the first pair of suspenders, if his factory were working now, would inevitably offer Mlle. Spinelly a greater salary than any Mr. Ziegfeld can afford. It is an axiom of Broadway and Forty-second street that all the classy dressers discarded suspenders and went to the belt years ago because the pesky things would roll off your shoulders. But Mlle. Spinelly's do not.

They Never Fail Her.

There are not any of them in the back to roll. They begin at front meridian, slightly on one side, and keep on going until they have wandered as far as the nape of the neck, when they return to a point almost but not wholly coincidental with the point or place of beginning. Mlle. Spinelly, prancing, dancing, kicking, cavorting and being from time to time tossed about by Carl Randall, her dancing vis-a-vis, never falls or slips out of her suspenders from beginning to end, thus keeping green the memory of the original suspenders maker and proving the soundness of his theory that so long as suspenders meet at the back of the neck the country is safe and the customer comes back.

It is doubtful also if in any other respect the prediction of the advance writer as to Mlle. Spinelly's setting a new standard in woman's wear is to come to fruition and fulfilment. There was considerable cloak and suit opinion on the floor when she came on for her first number. The weight of it seemed to be that the little shirred trunks she had on would not go big with women who incline to the conservative in ladies' wear, and that there are reaches in Washington Heights and upper Fifth avenue where the muscle play which she affects as the only covering over her ribs and shoulders might not be considered refined.

New Singer Pleases.

But be that as it may, Mlle. Spinelly dances and sings captivatingly and has from tip to toe that Gallic quality which amuses and beguiles. "She has the wallop," was the criticism most frequently handled from lip to lip on Mr. Ziegfeld's roof. Her membral investiture, heralded as the most perfect pair in the world in all the advance notices, did not gain the full approbation of all the cognoscenti present. There were others who said, on the contrary, that all the exactions of classic and modern art had been met. Possibly the point will be settled some day, but as the last two freilckers left the roof it was still moot.

There was a variety of other novelties before and after and all around Mlle. Spinelly. Brandon Tynan appeared as David Belasco; Miss Lillian Lorraine headed a number and so did Miss Fannie Brice; there were groups to fill the eye from the workshop of Ben Ali Haggin; a solo on a saw by Sam Moore and a Chorus of Jewels, an Orchard of Girls and the Winter Beaches by the company generally. Waikiki and Coronado were included in the latter, but Arverne was left out.

But then what we call poetic license did not die with Shakespeare but remains the inheritance of all bards.

Choir, Orchestra and Soloists at This Concert

Schola Cantorum and N. Y. Symphony in Beethoven Society Programme.

The fifth concert of the Beethoven Association, which took place last evening in Aeolian Hall, was in respect of its assemblage of forces the most ambitious yet given by this unique organization. A choir from the Schola Cantorum, an orchestra from the Symphony Society, Sam Franko, always at home in conducting music of the elder days, several soloists, instrumental and vocal, and a programme of uncommon kind made the entertainment interesting from beginning to end.

Pianists thunder in season and out the Turkish March from the "Ruins of Athens" music, but last night it was heard in its original form, together with the chorus of dervishes. The choir, orchestra and Mr. Franko were concerned in this performance. Messrs. Barrere, Tinlot and Pollain played the serenade in D for flute, violin and viola, opus 25; Rudolph Ganz, with orchestral aid, the rondo in B flat, and George Hamlin, tenor, sang with Mr. Ganz's accompaniment the six songs of the cycle "To the Distant Beloved."

The cantata, "On the Death of a Hero," for soprano, bass, chorus and orchestra, was sung, with Mme. Julia Griffith, soprano, and Frederick Patton, bass, as soloists. The English version was a new one made by H. E. Krehbiel. The cantata had never before been given in this country, and indeed had seldom been heard even in Europe. Although a youthful composition, it justified the enthusiasm of Brahms, who declared that "Everything in it is true Beethoven."

The whole of the concert was meritorious. The various artists, who were as in the previous entertainments members of the organization and volunteers in the good cause, gave themselves to their labors with genuine devotion, and the audience, which was large, manifested its pleasure by frequent and hearty applause.

TWO SONG RECITALS.

Pedro Guetary, Spanish Tenor, and Miss Parkhurst, Soprano, Sing

Pedro Guetary, Spanish tenor and composer, gave a song recital yesterday afternoon at the Princess Theatre. Mr. Guetary sank leading roles for six seasons at the Royal Opera at Covent Garden, London, and he once sang the role of Alfredo to Mme. Adelina Patti's Violetta in a special performance of "La Traviata" at the late diva's castle, Craig-y-nos, in Wales. In 1894 he was with the Metropolitan Opera Company in this city. In his own country he has received honors from the King and Queen for his work as a composer. A large and interested audience heard his recital. Although his voice has lost its natural freshness, his breath control was admirable and he showed much knowledge of style, as for instance, in a difficult air from Handel's opera, "L'Ottone." His own compositions included Basque and other songs. Many of them were much liked, and one called "Mi Mina" the applause of the audience interrupted. The style of the songs showed understanding of the voice, though the piano accompaniments were not so good. A piano solo played by Arthur Brown, who also was the accompanist, was entitled "The Hispanic Society of America's Triumphal March."

At Aeolian Hall in the afternoon Miss Adele Parkhurst, a soprano, who was heard here last season, offered a well selected programme of old airs and songs old and new. She sang with a clear, high quality voice, but her tone production was uncertain. She imparted intelligence and spirit to her work and desirable musical sincerity.

Three Barrymores on One Bill.

Miss Ethel Barrymore, Lionel and John will take part in the benefit performance for S. Rankin Drew Post, No. 340, American Legion, to be held at the New Amsterdam Theatre Sunday evening, April 11. Their joint appearance is accounted for by the fact that the post was named for the son of Sidney Drew, who died in the war. The purpose of the benefit is to raise funds for a gymnasium for the post, which now numbers 300 theatrical members. The performance will be under the direction of R. H. Burnside.

Not for the Metropolitan.

Neither Titta Ruffo nor Mme. Tetrazzini is to be heard at the Metropolitan. Giulio Gatti-Casazza yesterday emphatically denied a published report he was negotiating for their services.
