Lakewood Would Take Place Among Summer Resorts

The Laurel in the Pines to Be Kept Open All Year—Social News.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., March 20.—The Laurel in the Pines announces that it will remain open all summer, which means that Lakewood bids fair to take a place among summer as well as winter resorts. Several of the smaller hotels in the last four years have kept open during the summer and had unusual success. However, none of the larger hotels was willing to take the "plunge" until now. Frank F. Shute, for years manager of the Laurel in the Pines, announced "the whole year round" policy. Already a score or more of the regular patrons have signified their intention of remaining for the summer.

PLAYWRIGHT, POET, DANCER, MRS. YARROW GOES ON STAGE

As Sara Crewe She Takes Up Acting as a Serious Career.

Mrs. William H. K. Yarrow.

Under the name of Sara Crewe Mrs. William H. K. Yarrow of New York and Philadelphia made her theatrical debut here on Friday night with the opening of "What's in a Name?" in Maxine Elliott's Theatre. Mr. Yarrow is a portrait painter with a studio in this city. Mrs. Yarrow, who is pretty, brunette and 24 years old, appeared as a show girl and did a ballroom dance as part of a double quartette.

Mrs. Yarrow's name for the stage is Sara Crewe, and she wants to make herself known in the theatre under that name. She took up this work partly with the aim of studying costume designing. She always has had an interest in theatrical work, she said last night backstage, and wrote an Oriental pantomime which was produced two years ago in the Little Theatre in Philadelphia and in Baltimore by the Philadelphia Stage Society, a group of amateurs. She designed the costumes and scenery for this production, which ran through the winter.

Her dancing has been the feature at charity balls in Philadelphia and other places. She made her debut in society in Philadelphia six years ago, and soon afterward was married to Mr. Yarrow, who is a grandson of Mr. William H. Kemble, one of the founders of the Interborough Company here. They have a cottage, Junglenook, at Bar Harbor, Me., where they go every summer. They are well acquainted in artistic and musical circles here.

Mrs. Yarrow is also a writer and has had verses published in the Chicago Poetry Magazine and elsewhere. Three of her lyrics were set to music by Carlos Salzedo and sung by Miss Greta Torpadi in Aeolian Hall on January 25 last. They have also been translated into French.

Mrs. Yarrow did canteen and other service at the time of the war. "It was the war work that made me want to go ahead and accomplish something for myself," she said. "I really want to take this career up seriously and not play with it. No, it's not because I want the money, but to do something myself."

Two Operas by Verdi Heard at the Metropolitan

About 4,000 persons crowded the Metropolitan Opera House at the matinee performance yesterday, when, with Enrico Caruso in the cast, Verdi's "La Forza del Destino" was sung for the fifth time this season. Reappearing with the great tenor as important singers were Miss Rosa Ponselle, Miss Jeanne Gordon and Messrs. Amato, Mardones and Chalmers. Mr. Papi conducted.

In the evening Verdi's "Rigoletto" was repeated, with Mme. Maria Barrientos and Messrs. Hackett and De Luca singing the leading roles. Mr. Moranzoni was the conductor. The house was crowded.

ORCHESTRA TO CHANGE NAME.

New Symphony to Be Known as National Symphony.

Application has been made in Albany in the office of the Secretary of State for permission to change the name of the New Symphony Orchestra, Inc., of the Musicians' New Orchestra Society to the National Symphony Orchestra, Inc. The change, if approved, will be made effective at the end of the present season.

The proposed change has been undertaken because of the similarity between the name of the New Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Artur Bodanzky, and that of the New York Symphony Orchestra, over which Walter Damrosch presides.

When the New Symphony Orchestra was organized a little more than a year ago by a group of orchestral players working co-operatively, they chose the present name because it contained the basic idea of the organization, which was a symphony orchestra and a new one. After the orchestra began giving concerts, however, its attention was called to the similarity of names by Paul D. Cravath, attorney for the Symphony Society of New York. He explained that it was causing complications in the office of his organization.

It was not deemed advisable to make a change of name in the middle of the season, but now that the season is approaching its close the directors of the New Symphony have taken action to prevent a repetition of complications for a sister organization. There also will be time for the New Symphony to impress its new name upon the public before the beginning of next season, for which not only Mr. Bodanzky but also Willem Mengelberg, of Amsterdam, Holland, have been engaged as conductors.

"SINGING PLAYLET" PLEASES.

Heinrich Meyn and Miss Gould Have the Only Roles.

At the MacDowell Club, 108 West Fifty-fifth street, Heinrich Meyn last night presented for the first time his so-called singing playlet entitled "At the Inn of the Tired Donkey."

There only were two characters in the sketch, a brother and a sister, Miss Edith Chapman Gould singing the feminine role and Mr. Meyn the male. Blair Neal was at the piano. The youth, who had run away from home early in life, was returning to see his dying father when he stopped at the Inn where he met the girl who proved to be his sister. It was a pleasing performance.

In the audience were the Rt. Hon. Sir Edgar and Lady Speyer, Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Henry Clarke, Mrs. Henry T. Fleak, Mrs. Frederick Gotthold and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Prince.

Mme. Schnitzer's Recital.

Mme. Germaine Schnitzer gave the last of her three piano recitals for the current season yesterday afternoon in Aeolian Hall. The occasion was also in the nature of a farewell, as she is about to go to Europe, where she will tour in concert. She was heard by a large audience and her performance was warmly received. The programme comprised an interesting old "Sixieme Sonate" by Paradies (1710-1792), Schumann's "Carnaval," Schubert's impromptu theme and variations, opus 142; Reeces by Chabrier, Brahms and Rachmaninov, a toccata, opus 111, by Saint-Saens, and Liszt's Ninth rhapsody.

Mme. Schnitzer played with a style rich in intelligence, fine rhythm and taste. Her tone was not always of the best, being not infrequently prone to hardness. But there was withal much beauty of shading and delicacy in her work. Her playing of Schumann's "Carnaval" had poetic feeling and mood variety to commend it, and this number was especially liked.

Rummage Sale for Day Nursery.

Boston Orchestra Lacking Qualities of Its Best Days

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its fifth matinee concert of its thirty-fourth season in this city in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. It was the final concert of the series, and the conditions surrounding it were such as to cause the admirers of the famous organization grave concern.

The story of the rebellion in the orchestra and the defection of thirty-one members has already been told here. The playing of the body brought together from the faithful members and recruits hastily summoned from among the ranks of previous members was better in the B flat symphony of Beethoven on Thursday night than in the G minor symphony of Mozart, which followed Beethoven's "Fidelio" overture on yesterday's list.

The other numbers were Borodin's "On the Steppes," Debussy's "Petite Suite," arranged for orchestra by Henri Busser, and Goldmark's "Sakuntala" overture. There was some good playing in the Debussy suite, but in general the orchestra sounded rough. There was little or nothing of the delicious mellowness and transparency of tone for which the Bostonians have been noted. However, in the circumstances no finished performance could be expected.

It was evident that the sympathies of the audience were with Pierre Monteux, the conductor, for the applause with which he was received when he first appeared and which followed the symphony was plainly meant as a special demonstration.

The future of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in the lap of the gods who protect union labor. It remains for unionism to perpetuate or destroy this institution. If it proves to be true that seventy-four members are pledged to leave the orchestra if it is not unionized then the organization is doomed, for great concert orchestras cannot be improvised. For the sake of its splendid history and of musical art in this country it is to be hoped that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will survive the deadly blow it has received and will continue to bring its delightful contributions to New York's musical season.

Bloch Sonata Recitals.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bloch, violinist and pianiste, gave the second of two sonata recitals, first announced for March 5, last evening in Aeolian Hall. Three familiar but beautiful works for violin and piano made up their list—Bach's sonata in C major, Cesar Franck's in A major and Beethoven's "Kreutzer." The playing of the two artists gave much pleasure. They have an admirable knowledge of ensemble performance and this knowledge they put to the test again in their work last night, with many desirable results.

Miss Gall With Liberty Chorus.

Miss Yvonne Gall, who sang here with the Chicago Opera Company, has volunteered to sing at the concert of the People's Liberty Chorus in Carnegie Hall on next Friday night. She will sing "Old Folks at Home." Afterward a scroll will be presented to her making her the first honorary artist member of this organization. The concert will be conducted by L. Camilleri, director of the chorus, who also will lead an orchestra from the New Symphony Orchestra in several numbers.

Delafield is chairman of the Endowment Fund Committee and Mr. Reeve Schley, vice-president of the Chase National Bank, is treasurer.

WILLIAM L. ANDREWS, BIBLIOPHILE, IS DEAD

Formerly Treasurer of Metropolitan Museum of Art.

William Loring Andrews, for many years a prominent leather merchant and more recently a collector of rare books and a patron of art, died Friday at his home, 16 East Thirty-eighth street. He was one of the founders of the Grolier Club and a member of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, serving at one time as treasurer. Following a line of interest allied with his work of collecting, Mr. Andrews wrote a number of books, privately printed, which were regarded as excellent examples of book making in the matter of illustration and binding.

Mr. Andrews was born in this city eighty-two years ago and was a descendant of William Andrews, one of the colonists led by John Davenport, who founded New Haven in 1638. Mr. Andrews succeeded to the hide and leather business founded by his father and managed it from 1855 to 1878, when he retired. He leaves his wife, who was Jane Elizabeth Crane, daughter of the late Theodore Crane, and two sons, Loring and Theodore.
